It would be impossible, even if it were of absolute necessity, to guard the country against the importation of Cholera on the line of our inland frontier, extending over hundreds of miles. But here it may be said that our neighbors, in defending themselves from such an importation into their own territory, are virtually making us participants of the same advantages. That argument, however, cannot apply to our numerous ports situated along the coast of the Gulf and the lower St. Lawrence, such as are the free port of Gaspe, the ports of Paspebiac, Perce, Rimouski, Escoumins, and the ports of the Counties of Saguenay and Chicoutimi. A medical health officer chosen on the spot might perhaps be appointed at each of these ports, with instructions to inspect every ship, and in case of sickness to stop each ship from partiquer and by instituting the ship herself as quarantine ground for the master and crew, what those on board may be submitted to special treatment, till the sickness has disappeared, providing for any case in which, by death, the crew is reduced to an insufficient number of hands.

The point, however, at which a quarantine is of all importance, as proved by the constant experience of former epidemics, is on the St. Lawrence at the entrance of the port of Quebec. The Government possesses already, and very fortunately, at that very point an admirable establishment, which only requires to be made at times of more than ordinary dangers adequate to the circumstances. A better selection for a Quarantine than the Grosse Isle Station cannot be made, situated as it is at some thirty odd miles from Quebec, on an island of about 600 acres superficies, with deep water and good anchorage, at least three miles distant from any parish or village, and yet sufficiently near to prompt and commodious public means of communication.

There can be practiced a reasonable sequestration embracing, on one side, the relative security from infect on which quarantine measures can afford, and, on the other side, neither vexations nor rumous to commerce and international intercourse.—The rules to be adopted to carry on such a reasonable quarantine need not be laid down in this Memorandum; they constitute no new science to propound, being well considered and set down in the works of many authors and in the codes of most nations. This document, being intended for all, can of enter into lengthy details, and, moreover, as this part of the preventive measures devolves upon the State, the Executive has already, and can always have, at its command the means of information sought for to determine its action.

There is, as connected with the Quarantine, a question on which it is important that the public should possess some practical information, in order to prevent one-sided notions taking possession of the public mind and thus become a subject of very serious embarrassment. This question may be thus written: What rules shall apply to steamers of passenger lines frequenting the ports of Quebec and Montreal, one of which—the Canadian Ocean Steamship Company's Line—is subsidized by our Government and carries our European weekly mail?

It seems impossible to exempt them entirely from quarantine when coming from a country laboring under the scourge; but a strict quarantine for such ships may prove very disastrous, even absolutely ruinous for the company and calamitous for commerce in general.

This simple expose of the question at once suggests that it is one of no small importance, and one which is fraught with serious difficulties.

Without any attempt to solve the question in this Memorandum, it will not prove useless, it is hoped, to suggest a measure, the adoption of which may result (if not always, at least in several instances) in the avoidance of the greatest danger, on one side, and of immense losses to the company, passengers and merchants, on the other.

This measure is suggested by the practice for a long time adopted by the Austrian Government towards their company of steamers trading between Smyrna and Trieste. This practice would secure an increased efficiency in the case of our steamers, from some modifications of a more stringent nature and from the fact of the greater length of the passage between Liverpool and Quebec than between Smyrna and Trieste. To follow this practice would require that a special medical health officer is placed on board each steamer, which will then be, whether there is disease or not on board, assimilated to a quarantine station. This officer to be appointed by Government, at the first warning of Cholera, for a limited required time besides the ordinary physician of the ship.

During the storage of cargo sanitary precautions would have to be enforced and preventive disinfection practiced in a way not to damage the goods, by the use, for instance, of dry hypochlorite of lime or some equally efficacious disinfectants, and whitewashing of ship and boxes with lime water. These recommendations are not made in ignorance of what can be said against the real efficacy of such measures, but it is assumed that the wiser course is to incline towards the safer side.

Every day of the passage sanitary measures would have to be resorted to, according to regulations made to that effect, and amongst others the goods and effects of the passengers in daily use would have to be ventilated on deck.

In the case of five days having elapsed since the last attack of cholera on board, at the moment of arrival at Grosse Isle, all those yet on sick and convalescent lists being landed, the ship, without further detention, would be permitted to proceed to Quebec, and, if free from cholera on her arrival at Quebec, then allowed to pratique, if not free from Cholera, ordered to remain at anchor at the mouth of the St. Charles, to be dealt with according to the orders of the inspecting physician at the port after consultation with the Quebec Board of Health.

In the case of detention at Grosse Isle, a shorter period, less stringent measures of purification to be adopted for these ships than with ordinary vessels. Even partial admission to pratique might be allowed them.

Now comes the consideration of the second sort of sequestration which has been indicated at the beginning of this section, that is, isolated Cholera Hospitals in cities.

Very little requires to be said on the subject in this Memorandum, further than that the adoption of such hospitals, and several of them in large cities, is a measure of paramount importance. These hospitals, of course, are destined to receive the poor, to avoid the formation of foci of cholera in the small, filthy and crowded lodgings. Refuges for convalescents of the same class ought also to be procured for a convalescent in a vehicle to carry and impart the assistance. It devolves upon the municipalities of towns and cities to create such temporary establishments, and it is for the Local Boards of Health to see that they are well ventilated, properly kept and attended to, according to peculiar local circumstances.

HYGIENIC PRECAUTIONS.

The Sanitary measures to be adopted can be conveniently classified under two heads, viz: Public and Private measures, and these are again subdivided into two other classes; measures relating to persons, and measures relating to things.

Necessarily the information or advice imparted in the following lines are restricted to general principles, intended to serve as a compendium on subjects upon which the reflections of all and the serious studies of some are to be directed. Sanitary measures concern every locality and every place, they apply even to isolated country dwellings of farmers and others, but they particularly apply to villages, towns and cities, because the larger the agglomeration of population in a given place the more those measures become necessary, from the fact that the actual number of lives exposed is greater, and also that the agglomeration increases the danger in a far greater ratio than that of numbers alone. Every thing being equal, a population of so many thousands gathered into a smaller space, will, in time of pestilence, suffer a greater loss than an equal number of persons spread over a larger superficies.

It is a matter of public security to have every thing of a dangerous nature removed from the centres of population and vicinity of human abodes; such as are contents of cess-pools, composts, offals, heaps of manure, carcasses of animals, a slaughter, in one word every sort of vegetable or animal matter in actual or impending decomposition.

In reference to the disturbing of such matters, when occurring in masses, a very important remark is to be made. Such masses should be carted away to farms in cold season. But if in time of actual pestilence it is better not to disturb them at all, but to resort to the means of disinfecting the surface, and covering them with a sufficient layer of dry earth.

Pools of stagnant water, open sewers, discharged ditches of establishments of industry are also vicinities of dangerous character, therefore to drain or to cover, or to disinfect them, are salubrious measures of great importance.

There is a numerous class of trades and manufactures which being in their very nature offensive ought not to be allowed to be carried on in the midst of towns and cities, such are the slaughtering of animals, collecting and storing of old rags and debris, manufacturing lime, vegetable charcoal and animal charcoal, acids, coal oil refineries, tanneries, making of artificial manures, soda and candle factories, and many other branches of industry, especially those connected with the transformation of parts of animals, which debris are not to be collected in quantities without being submitted to inspection and sanitary precautions.

Large stables, collections of cattle intended for slaughter, and especially piggeries are very objectionable in cities; as the establishment of the first mentioned class cannot be prohibited, it is necessary that stringent regulations for the very frequent carting out of town of litters and manure be enforced.

The question of carrying off the surface water, always more or less impregnated with putrescent matters in towns and cities, and the daily mechanical removal of the night soil, in other words the question of drainage and sewerage generally is an important in a sanitary point of view, as it is difficult of a satisfactory solution in a scientific and financial light. Evidently such complicated problems are not to be treated of in a paper like this; whereever a village, town or city can undertake such comparatively vast works its municipal authorities must have recourse to professional men to deal with the question on the spot.

In the absence of under drainage, open drains ought to be established to dry the soil, and in the absence of perfect sewerage (an extremely rare advantage,) disinfectants and interment, when practicable, are to be applied, it in conjunction one with the other so much the better.

After having thus enumerated the principal objectionable materials, trades and manufactures which ought to be prohibited, let every one be reminded of things which are to be provided, and especially of the very great importance of obtaining an abundant supply of water which should be of the best quality.

Every possible means to furnish plenty of good wholesome water to the population of villages, towns and cities ought to be put in requisition by the municipal authorities, in order to provide for an abundant supply of this commodity wanted at all times, but singularly indispensable in time of pestilence.*

* Dr. Dundas Thomson says, in reference to the subject of the influence of water on the appearance of Cholera in London:—

"But, perhaps, the most terrible example on record of the fatal effects of impure water occurred in 1854. I found that the Southwark Company's water was of a different composition from the water of the Lambeth Company.—When I applied a piece of muslin over the supply pipe of the Southwark Company to the cistern in my laboratory at St. Thomas's Hospital, a large quantity of human excrement was detained, and the impurity in solution was much greater in the Southwark Company than in the Lambeth water, contained little or no matter in mechanical suspension. The Lambeth water was obtained from Hampton, while that of the Southwark Company was pumped up from the river near Vauxhall-bridge. These two companies possessed mains in the same streets, and supplied the houses indiscriminately. Analysis alone enabled me to detect the two waters, as the inhabitants, without consulting their water receipts, were unable to state the source of supply. And although the population supplied by the two companies was precisely in the same condition, except as to water, the cholera deaths in the houses supplied by the Lambeth Company were 37 to every 10,000, and in those by the Southwark Company 130 to 10,000, or as one to every three and a half. I conclude from the data supplied that 2,500 persons were destroyed by the Southwark water, who would have been saved if they could have obtained the Lambeth water. It is a remarkable fact that the Lambeth water, in the epidemic of 1848-49 was more fatal in its effects than the Southwark the Lambeth Company taking their water lower down the river at that time. The mortality in houses supplied by the Lambeth water was 136 in 10,000 while the deaths in houses supplied by the Southwark water were 118 in 10,000.

Such an examination bearing on measures of so self-evident a necessity, may appear to many, nothing else than the useless uttering of truisms and common place remarks, but the daily neglect of these measures, the apathy entertained about them, the constant evils resulting from such apathy and neglect are a sufficient proof of the necessity of their being repeatedly brought before the public. Let these suggestions be continually dwelt upon lest, after having been carelessly heard, they should be voluntarily forgotten.

The cleaning of streets, yards, public buildings and private houses ought to be thorough before the hot season sets in and before the malady has made its appearance. There is in most of our Villages, Towns and Cities quantities of old wooden pavements, planks and other decaying timber, lying in the streets and in and about the back grounds in a state of partial decomposition and absolutely saturated with filth and moisture of all sorts which should be burned, or carted out in open country early in the spring, should it be considered available for anything useful.

The sanitary or precautionary measures may be mostly all expressed by two collective words: Cleanliness and Ventilation. Cleanliness of the streets, passages, yards, dwellings public and private, where the removal of all matters which are factors of decomposition, either as ferments or as fermentable bodies. Every remain either *vegetable or animal is susceptible of de*composition, and consequently, when out of place, becomes a fertile cause of insalubrity and disease. Out of place is intended to mean where they are not wanted for actual and immediate use; for example, collections of hides are out of place every where else than in the establishments where they are to be converted into leather, glue, animal charcoal or any other industrial product; and the establishments themselves are out of place in the midst of centres of population; again manure and composts are out of place any where else than on the farms they are destined to fertilize.

Cleanliness is obtained by scratching away, washing off and carting to the fields of offensive matters. In the cleaning of polluted places the use of a little chloride of lime in the water may be of great benefit. The same remark however which has been made about disturbing masses during hot weather and in time of pestilence, also applies to filth collected on walls and other surfaces of dwelling and premises when under the immediate influence of extreme heat and moisture, putrefaction and diffusion of miasm, acquires an immense impetus under such circumstances, consequently it might not be unattended with danger to undertake any extensive hot water washing of these dwellings during sultry weather; and it might be better to cover the surfaces of such dwellings or their appurtenances with a thick coat of paint or lime.

As several allusions have already been made to disinfectants it is just as well to remark, so that it be well understood, firstly: that substances called disinfectants in common language, are not all possessed of such properties: Secondly, that ever real disinfectants, (like all other precautionary measures) although of beneficial use, are not in themselves infallible resources—they are simply good adjuvants. Thus the acquiring of the best conditions of salubrity is not a simple but a complex problem, the result can only be obtained by the operations of various forces converging towards the same point of action.

But few of the best disinfectants will be mentioned here, in order not to create confusion in the mind of persons not deeply versed in these matters, and also in order that special attention being concentrated on a few, more certainty of an ample supply of them is obtained, and the prevention imposing on the credulity of the people.

Quick Lime is recommended for its cheapness, for its being so readily obtainable everywhere, for its easy application and for its being so familiarly known to every one. It is well also to mention purifying qualities of powdered charcoal.

Chloride of lime, sulphates of iron and permanganate of potash, or Condy's fluids, are the other disinfectants recommended; and it is hoped that they will be imported (not being yet manufactured in the country) by druggists and merchants, in ample quantities and sold at a reasonable trade price.

These substances are not to be employed indiscriminately in places actually occupied by people; they are specially intended for sewers, heaps of dirt or manure outside privies, night pail, &c. If otherwise employed they ought to be so under the direction of medical men or apothecaries.

Chloride of lime may be used in the proportion of one pound of Chloride to a gallon of water, and it is assumed that a pound of chloride of lime so diluted is sufficient to partially disinfect one thousand gallons of running sewerage; when used for washing a much weaker mixture is to be made, say an ounce to a gallon of water, and the articles are to be well rinced and cleaned in pure water, and well exposed afterwards. In every case chloride must be well mixed with water.

Sulphates of Iron and copper may be used in the proportion of a pound to a gallon of water for disinfecting filth and sewerage. Condy's strong or red fluid may be diluted in the proportion of one gallon to fifty gallons of water, and the weak or green fluid in the proportion of one to thirty gallons. However strong may be the faith in disinfectants, in spite of what is alleged against them, they can never supersede or cause to be overlooked the more reliable measures, as are cleanliness and ventilation for instance.

Good ventilation infers firstly perfect cleanliness of dwellings; secondly, the avoidance of crowding, coupled with a free circulation of wholesome air.

The connexion of this broad principle is suggestive of advice in a general form: that crowded and long standing gatherings of people are to be (as much as religious, educational, military and civic duties can permit) avoided during the reign of pestilence, especially at night, and that this precaution or rule applies not only to the interior of buildings, but even to meetings in the open air. Of course in the application of such a principle no one ought to indulge in pusillanimity and the dreading of extreme consequences.

Times of epidemic are not times to fly from the service of God in his own house; and they are no excuse for desertion of other public duties, but they are times for prudence on the part of legitimate rulers, and of obedience on the part of other members of the community. It would be a desirable measure that, during the prevelence of Cholera, colleges and schools should be closed and vacated.

It is a rule to be always observed during mild seasons, that churches, public halls, and rooms in ordinary dwellings, when not actually occupied, should be open by means of their windows to the access of currents of fresh air, as sweeping as the state of the atmosphere and artificial means when at command can allow. This suggestion is not to be understood as recommending the introduction of cold draughts or direct strong currents of air where persons are standing, sitting or reposing; but under these circumstances ventilation should be effected quietly as well as steadily. Fresh air is a commodity which men can use and abuse.

In the present state of science no fixed formula can be given for the space of room allowance requisite for each person, nor is there any one admitted method of ventilating buildings, for the simple reason that ventilation depends on a multitude of circumstances, varying with the external ambient air, the habits, temperaments, healthy or unhealthy condition of persons, the dispositions and situations of tenements, and so forth.

A man can be ventilated to death by fresh air in a box and can be suffocated by foul air in an immense hall. It devolves upon every one in his public or private capacity to adopt measures of this kind, and upon the local Boards of Health during the prevalence of epidemics to see that no avoidable evils resulting from deficiencies of space and ventilation are allowed to endanger the public health.

A special mention is to be made here of the annoyance and discomfort very often met with by our travelling community, which may be, in time of pestilence the source of great danger, that is the overcrowding of cars on Railways, and sometimes of Steamers with passengers. In such times there should be no more than one person for each bed of a sleeping car, and no more passengers in any other vehicle than there are seats to accommodate. While speaking of Railways it is deemed of the utmost importance to revert to the necessity of remedying the abominable nuisance of privies of all our Railway Stations, and to the detestable habit of soiling the approaches of every stopping place on our Railroad tracks.

The privies of Cars and Steamers should also be the object of very special attention and supervision.

Without a great display of dogmatical science it is easy to pronounce whether the atmosphere of an apartment is close, overloaded with noxious gasses or odors, either too hot or too cold, too dry or too moist, for ordinary purposes. Besides it would be impossible to alter at once, or for many years to come, even if it were a necessity, the permanent circumstances of dwellings public or private. So it is better to leave aside those questions of discussion and to resort in addition to the simple and common means of keeping everything clean, of making use of the doors, windows, wickets, and also of large fans to agitate the air of the inside, where the surrounding external atmosphere is still and heavy. It is a great criterion to judge of the sanitary condition of any lodging that its inhabitants who have dwelt in it for a reasonable time (all other things being equal) have a comparatively looking clean, strong and healthy appearance. Under these circumstances there is very reason to believe that the perils of residing in such a dwelling are not great, even if there were something evidently susceptible of being ameliorated. This of course would be no reason to abandon any idea of progressive improvement, but it would be a sufficient cause not to adopt vexatious measures against the proprietor or inmates of such tenements.

It is a precaution of the utmost importance (the abandonment of which might be felt fatal to many lives) that the stoves or heating apparatus of dwellings should be kept during all season in good working order, so that they can be used moderately in case of sudden lowering of the temperature and also in case of extreme dampness. For although ordinary and gradual diminution of temperature and continuous action of cold season such as heralds the approach of winter has a marked effect on the stopping of the disease, the same effect is by no means produced by an abrupt change from a hot day to a few hours of summer cold; such change, besides its depressing effect on the animal functions especially those of the stomach and bowels, seems to act by the way of reaction as an intensifying agent on the decomposition of organic matters, which cannot be entirely removed from the immediate vicinity of human abodes. It is not needless to remark that a heating apparatus is also a most useful means of effecting ventilation.

It is an important duty devolving on the municipal authorities of towns and cities to see that all adulterations and alterations of articles of food and common beverage are prevented. A large town or city ought to have a medical inspector, who being a practical chemist and a microscopist should watch over the buying and selling of all alimentary substances in common use.

As to preservations of a purely hygienic character applying particularly to ordinary daily regimen, they do not differ from those which apply at other times, with the exception that some innocent indulgences, such as friendly gatherings, might perhaps better be avoided, as out...ng anything indifferent in itself which is known by every one to have a depressive effect on the natural functions of the organism, and particularly any over exertion of the mind and body.

Again and again let it be repeated that drunkenness; immoderate use of food and drink, excesses and vice in general are par excellence the predisposing causes of sickness, cholera especially and fatal complications of the malady.

There is no necessity in time of epidemic for a change of customary habits and diet provided they are good; far from it, there may be danger in making any important change.

But if the habits or diet are bad it is of much consequence that they should be moderated, and that such modification should take place before the appearance of the scourge, in order that all the functions of the body have become with such changed state of things before the time of trial has arrived.

Every article of food and every beverage or preparation known by a person as having on him bowels a loosening effect or producing costiveness are to be avoided; the first on account of their actual action, the second as occasioning afterwards the use of aperient medicines, or being a reaction to the same effect. Care should also be taken not to fast when attending the sick, nor to remain too long without food at any time during pestilence.

Occasional use of bathing and the occasional taking of daily cleanliness of person are ordinarily needed, but caution should be observed against too prolonged and frequent bathing.

It is well to wear warmer than ordinary summer clothing, especially flannel next the skin, because there is in times of Cholera a predisposition to sudden chillness, against which it is wise to be constantly guarded; the use of flannel belts on the belly is often recommended, and great care should be taken not to allow the feet to become cold and damp, especially when not in actual bodily activity.

As seen in the preceding lines, the principles of hygiene are in the main very simple, still their being enforced with strict observance on the public requires not a small share of industry and understanding on the part of those who are entrusted with that duty. The execution however of some of the measures (as applied to local circumstances) required in case of epidemic are exclusively within the province of the medical profession, and it stands to reason that there should be a comparatively large proportion of its members in the composition of the local Boards of Health. This is not to grant a favor, but rather is it an onerous and responsible duty imposed on a class of the community more strictly obliged by the nature of their avocation to undertake it.

INSTRUCTIONS AND ADVICE.

One of the evils connected with the appearance of public pestilence is the indulgence in spreading reports, rumors and opinions of all sorts. Thence timid people are frightened, and excitable people lose their self-possession.

Men of systematic ideas propound wild theories, and credulous persons adopt them as absolute truths. Speculators are also apt to take their chance of such times, and long before the appearance of Cholera, advertisements are seen offering for sale all sorts of remedies and specifics for that scourge. Patent medicines, previously unsaleable as curative compounds against almost every known ailment, are presented with a new placard, in which the word Cholera is added to the already long catalogue of fever, debility, inflammation, gangrene, diabetes, suppression of urine, constipation, diarrhœa, &c., &c., all of which are to be cured under all circumstances, real, possible or imaginary. Thus and in many other ways charlatanism is opening its meshes to credulity and fears.

To lend a too credulous ear to all these reports, rumors, predictions and promises becomes the source of much danger. The press should be guarded from giving countenance to such parties for the injurious effects therefrom resulting, could they be realized, would be found to be of alarming magnitude.

The duty of every one is very simple, and to accomplish it is the only means of expecting immunity for our self and of being useful to others. The laws of the country have provided that public bodies should be selected in each locality, to collect information, to watch over the progress of the malady and to give orders for the execution of all necessary measures; the wisest course, surely is to look to these persons for information if needed and to accomplish cheerfully and faithfully what is recommended or ordered by them.

If persons should come, there is a class of men whose minds have been directed to the study of the function of the human frame and the cure of disease; their duty as well as their interest is to effect all that human skill can do to restore health, and on their race as rest their honor, peace and comfort; it is true they may be unsuccessful in their efforts, but far less will be incurred than at the hands of irresponsible persons.

Some advice is much needed in relation to the attendance on the sick during Cholera, because cowardly fear may lead people even to forget what they owe to their fellow creatures and even to their near relatives; and on the other side ill advised devotedness may expose people to unnecessary danger. A very simple rule previously offered to the reflections of a sound intellect and to the feelings of an honest heart may do a great deal of good. Wherever is the sick and wherever he lays the prey to the malady, whatever your station in life you owe to him help and comfort; if he is in need of medical assistance seek it; if he requires anything in your power to give, give it to him, if he has no attendance attend to him or procure them for him. But if the sick person happens to be well provided and attended to, then there is no occasion to go near him unless he is a bosom friend or a relative.

The place is just as good as any other to insert a remark which is to be taken as one of paramount importance. The articles of clothing and bedding which have been soiled by the dejections of the sick are to be first disinfected, and then washed carefully; if of small comparative value they had better be burned or buried. The dejections of the patients are to be received in pails containing some disinfectants, and are not to be then thrown into sewers, privies or cess-pools, but are to be interred at some depth.

The crowding of people around a sick bed is especially bad in regard to Cholera. In duty and honor you are bound to face every danger when called upon for a good purpose, in duty you are bound to avoid the needless risk when there is no useful object to be attained. If we except morbid curiosity, there is not, generally speaking, so great danger as people may fancy in the attendance on the sick, and provided that the precautions indicated in this memorandum are observed, there is hardly any more panic than in the mere walking the streets of a locality under the scourge. Most of the medical men, sisters of charity and attendants of hospitals in the country, have weathered [illegible] without being [illegible] in a recumbent position in bed between cotton sheets or blankets dry and warm—frictions under the bedding to avoid the action of cold air, the use of hot bricks, sinapisms or mustard plasters and other modifying agents at the beginning checked to reproduce or moistening the skin, in the usual, appearance to the surface of the body to receive the natural heat.

At the same time [illegible] used internally to endeavor to revive the pulse and pulsation of the [illegible] generally.

The period of reaction when past, that [illegible] by abundant [illegible] found and not accompanied with congestion requires no special treatment.

In case of signs of congestion and any [illegible] or [illegible] the only remedies which can be attempted without danger by a stranger to medicine would be the warm foot bath, friction with mustard or other rubefacient to the feet and calves of the legs and diluent drinks like linseed tea not too thick, poultices in the region of the kidneys (or hollow part of the back) in order to restore the urinary functions.

Congestion may be detected by some medical attendant sometimes by noticing an extra turgescence and redness of the face, if the head is threatened or by a sensation of fullness if another part in the seat of the rush of blood, as increased pulsation in both cases.

If the period of true reaction is accompanied with no unfavorable symptoms, and if the urinary functions are well established, the better plan is to let the patient alone as far as medication is concerned, and to begin feeding him gradually—but if symptoms of a typhoid type supervene, which may be noticed personally by the oppressed aspect of the patient, anxiety, restlessness, and a somewhat stupid appearance of countenance, accompanied or followed by delirium; some stimulants in small quantities are to be given to the patient, and brief tea administered to him, as exhaustion and want of action is generally the cause of the complication at that period of Cholera. Of course such remarks are only intended for the guidance of people in the absence of medical attendance.

To attempt more than such a simple treatment carried out with care, attention and perseverance would be, to say the least, risking a good deal.

A precept to be invariably followed is to leave the sick entirely to nature's care, rather than to try drugs and remedies, the effects and results of which are almost perfectly unknown and at unascertained periods of the malady.

It has been thought a duty not to close these remarks without touching a point of great magnitude as well as of great delicacy that is, in case of the actual death of a pregnant woman the Cæsarean section ought to be performed, if allowed by the family; although there is probably very little chance of saving the child, for the reason that no haste is done on the one side, and that a great result may possibly be obtained on the other.

The Detroit Conflagration.

Among the losers is the chief editor of the Post, Gen. Carl Schurz. He had two large boxes in the depot of the Michigan Southern railroad, containing, among other things a very valuable portion of his library, a collection of fine geographical and military maps, a collection of photographic reproductions of the best paintings in the gallery of Madrid, several volumes of manuscript, a number of letters from Mr. Lincoln and other prominent persons, and all his correspondence with his family during the last twelve years, containing an almost complete diary of the political and military events with which he has been connected.

It is believed that at least twenty lives were lost. The captain of the Windsor states that thirteen men, who are known to have been on board that vessel, are missing.

The sheds of the Great Western Railway was opened and the contents found uninjured. It had already stood the ordeal of fire before — Five other safes in the general offices, though almost red hot, were found, on being opened, but little charred in the interior. The one belonging to Hendrie & Co. which contained valuable papers and considerable money, was not damaged badly, only its ornaments being stripped off. The books and papers of the engineers' department, kept in a small Lillie's safe, were found as good as new.

The scenes on the river beggar description. The burning steamer swayed to and fro by the changing evolutions of the tide, with the decks and sides covered with drowning, burning men, whose cries, groans, prayers, and imprecations could be heard above the noise of the firemen on the shore, and the shouts of their rescuers on the water, presented a spectacle of grand and awful sublimity, never to be forgotten

The losses, as previously reported, have been materially increased on subsequent investigation. That of the Detroit and Milwaukee can not be much less than three-quarters of a million dollars, on which, however, there is considerable insurance.

It was very fortunate that the company saved all their locomotives and work-shops, for this has put it in their power to carry on their business without serious interruption — There were $350,000 worth of locomotives almost within reach of the flames. As near as can be ascertained, the company lost 75 cars

Yesterday (Sunday), fourteen additional bodies were recovered from the river, making sixteen in all thus far found — Nine of these were gathered from the deep within the space of three or four hours' dragging in the afternoon, by the crews of two small boats belonging to the ferry steamer Union, under the directions of Capt. Sullivan.

THE GERMAN QUARREL.

The German quarrel is reaching a critical stage The Austrian despatch in reply to the Prussian note. It is demanded that the Prussian armaments should be discontinued, or the alternative will be a request to the Federal Diet to interfere.

The Times, however, contained a telegram from its Vienna correspondent which gave a rather stronger tone to the despatch. It is actually demanded that Prussia shall demobilise her army, that is, while Austrian troops are pouring into Bohemia and may at any time be forced onto the Frontier, Prussia is to desist from counter preparations This last phase of the dispute the Times thinks the most compromising yet witnessed. A Vienna paper asserts, with some time peculiarity, that an offensive alliance has been concluded between Italy and Prussia against Austria. It is not sure, however, that the treaty has yet been ratified at Rome.

Kladderadatsch (the Berlin Punch) has a caricature on the Schleswig-Holstein difficulty.—Schleswig and Holstein are represented as the two legs of a pair of trousers. In the first part, Prussia and Austria have each got one leg on, with the remark "That does not do." In the second picture the trousers are divided, and each has got one leg. That does not do either In the third Prussia has got the whole garment to itself, and Austria is walking off with a bag of money, and that will do.

A Paris letter says that the city has been a little startled by the arrest of princes and princesses who had been "visiting" here with great lustre at the expense of credulous people. The prince is a splendid looking fellow. The princess is one of the most beautiful women ever seen here. When she entered a theatre the audience would almost rise in homage to her extraordinary beauty. Poor woman! she is really of noble birth; her family is one of the ancient families of Hungary. An adventurer of Irish extraction met her, dazzled her by his princely ride, and married her. He had obtained money from some sources before his marriage; but money lasted for a little time; the credulity of tradesmen ceased boundless, he ceased to be the fabulous "prince" loses its power when unaccompanied by gold. Home was forthcoming. The police were called in, and the prince discovered to be not only an adventurer, but a convict from some Irish or Scottish penal prison.

The present of the famous Druff breed is about to be despatched by the Sultan to the Emperor Napoleon.

MEETING OF PARLIAMENT.

Parliament is at length to meet for the despatch of business on the 8th of June. A short session is anticipated; we had better wait till we see how this will be. The subject of Confederation is at present agitating the Lower Provinces and their governing bodies, and it may be brought up in ours. But it is anticipated that, as the sister provinces are in favor of referring the whole scheme to a London conference, this session they will only take such steps as will ensure the perfection of the union, and that delegates will immediately leave for London. The following paragraph on the subject we clip from an exchange:—

On Saturday night we announced, on the authority of a special telegram from Ottawa, that Parliament is to meet for the despatch of business on the eighth of June. The date thus chosen is not of course the period which in ordinary times would be selected as the most favorable for legislators and legislation. In the present case, however, pleasure and convenience have had to bend to circumstances. Delay after delay has occurred in order to give the Lower Provinces time to decide upon their Confederation policy. At length such progress has been made that within a very short time after the date appointed for the meeting of our Parliament the whole of the Provinces will have spoken and it may be safely predicted will have spoken in favor of Union. All that will remain to be done will be the arrangement of details in which our legislature will, we presume, take similar action to that taken by the sister Provinces—that is to appoint delegates to the London Conference. This being the case, a very short session may be anticipated. The delegates, who in all probability be leading members of the Ministry, will have to hasten on their mission if anything definite is to be done before the rising of the Imperial Parliament. It is not unlikely that our Parliament will be adjourned after a short sitting, to meet again when the delegates return with the completed scheme in their possession. All that will then remain will be the passage of the necessary measures, which, we presume, will be done without much opposition, and then Confederation will be completed in so far as the Provinces are concerned.

This, in all probability, will be the last session of a Parliament of Canada under the present union. Details will no doubt be arranged before fall and Confederation completed, and the people's representatives from all parts of these provinces will for the first time meet to transact business together.—Now is the most important period in Canadian history since its settlement, and no act requires more wisdom and caution than does Confederation. Let us hope that wisdom will direct the counsels of those who are about to shape our future destiny.

CHOLERA IN NEW YORK.

A few cases of cholera have occurred in the city, and the most stringent measures are adopted to prevent the spread of the disease. Those cases that have occurred have been in places where the houses have been filthy and crowded. The disease appears to be fatal in many cases, and there are strong reasons to conclude that all the skill and care of the physicians will not be able to confine it to the quarantines or places near. It may, therefore, be expected to spread more or less. Every city, town and village is busily engaged in cleaning and preparing, so that, if it should come, it may be robbed of some of its victims. As it is generally held that cleanliness, pure air, and good healthy food, tend much to mitigate the disease, there may be fears entertained for such places as Montreal and other crowded places, where drainage can scarcely be obtained; but this should effect us but little here.—There are a few places, especially in the south of the Town, that require attention; but from the last report of the health inspector, we find that their attention has been directed to those places, and it now remains with the Council to make the necessary drains. The inspectors are at work daily, and are doing what they can to have the Town put to rights. The Council of Auburnham has also taken the matter in hand, and are setting to work to set things in order. These measures are wise, and may do much to save us from any very destructive ravages of the pestilence. But we should not rest in these as preventives entirely. It is beyond the power of man to prevent it, if the fiat has gone forth; nevertheless means are to be used, and may ameliorate, if not entirely prevent. Many are setting their houses in order, and every reasonable precaution is being used to prevent or allay. But there is one lesson that infinite wisdom teaches, and will prove a remedy against either depression or even the arrow of the fell destroyer. Would it not be wise to attend thereunto, and set the heart in order, and then neither the disease nor the fear of it will cast down nor destroy.

We refer our readers to an article on the first page this week. There are many useful remarks that may prove of benefit to some.

FISHERIES.—The following Fishery Regulation for Upper Canada has been approved by His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the 4th instant:—"Except with hook and line, no person shall fish for, catch or kill, Bass, Pickerel (Doree), Maskinonge, or Pike, between the fifth day of May and the first day of June, in Upper Canada."

A duty of 20 per cent has been imposed on live stock going from Canada to the United States. It commenced on the 4th of May.

The Late Inquest.

Coroner Benson has kindly sent us the papers connected with the late inquest of the body that was disinterred last week. We severe Mr. Benson that our remarks in reference to holding inquests without strong reasons to suspect foul play, were in no way intended to find fault with him. It is well that such enquiries can be instituted where there are suspicions, inasmuch as they often bring to light facts that would otherwise not be made known. They also free innocent parties from unjust accusations. But to our own knowledge, inquests have been instituted in town when no foul play other than is of every-day occurrence was suspected by those empanelled with the case, and the investigation led us to believe that very little good was effected towards preventing the recurrence of the dead, although the cause was well known to all the Jurors. Hence, we say that inquests are not necessary where the cause of decease is known, or where there is the de-ire merely to hold an inquest and disperse the cause, and yet when found out take no steps to prevent the repetition. Nor do we think it wise to encourage inquests unless there are stronger reasons than heated or irritated imaginations. We have no doubt that Mr. Benson felt there were sufficient reasons before instituting an investigation. We see by the papers given us that Mr. Benson did not act until an affidavit was filed that foul play was suspected. Under the circumstances no blame can be attached to him.

Suicide.

On Friday evening last Stephen McCarthy, Ex-Reeve of Eastmore, left home intending to go to the United States. He spent the greater part of the day in Town, and in the evening instead of proceeding as intended, returned homewards as far as Mr. Pope's hotel, Bridgenorth. Here he remained for a short period and according to our information went into the shed and remained a few minutes when some one invited him in. He had scarcely been many minutes in the house when drawing a pistol he said to one present "look Maggie" and discharged its contents in his own forehead. He lingered in pain till Sunday night or Monday morning when death put an end to his suffering. Deceased was a very civil inoffensive individual, and highly respected in his own township. J. R. Benson, Esq., Coroner, held an inquest on the body. The verdict returned was—"That Stephen McCarthy committed suicide by shooting himself. Cause supposed to be disappointed love."

Drowned,

On Sturgeon Lake, on Saturday evening last, Mr. Thomas Bick, Lock Tender at Bobcaygeon. Deceased and an Indian named Franklin left Bobcaygeon in a canoe to go to Mr. Sheffield's, about 3 miles up the lake. When a considerable distance up the lake Mr. Bick turned round to speak to Franklin, when he leaned too heavily on the side of the canoe and capsized it, throwing both into the water. Mr. Bick, however, could not swim, Franklin endeavored to save him but in vain. After several efforts he was forced to leave for the shore to save his own life and for aid, leaving Bick on the canoe but he was too far gone to remain on it, and very soon fell off to rise no more. Deceased was a respectable and quiet man and leaves numerous friends to mourn his untimely death.

Bank Changes.

The friends of J. M. Burns, Esq., of the Commercial Bank here, will learn with pleasure that he has been appointed to the management of the Royal Canadian Bank in Woodstock. Mr. Burns and family leave to-day for his new field of labor. During Mr. Burns' residence in Peterborough, he has been particularly remarkable for urbanity and kindness. In his public position he was most attentive and obliging to every one, so much so that he has made numerous friends who will not soon forget their pleasant intercourse with him, and the church here has lost one of its most zealous working members. The best wishes for his success of all who know him accompany him to his new sphere of labor, where, we feel certain, he will be able to conduct the business agreeably and successfully.

The Fall Wheat.

We learn, with regret, from various farmers, that immense areas of the fall wheat has to be ploughed up, and the ground sowed with some other grain. This is to be deplored, as farmers last fall made great efforts to put in a more than usual quantity, so that the labour and seed that will prove considerable inconvenience to many. Farmers were enabled last fall and winter, from the good crops and high prices, to discharge much of their liabilities, and another favourable season would have relieved the country of the nightmare of debt that is pressing many.

In the present state of things Mr. Donaldson, flax advocate, advises sowing the ground thus ploughed up with flax, which, he says, may be done at any time this month. Would it not be well to give it a trial.

We have received a very long communication of four leaves of foolscap from a correspondent from the country, on the subject of education for all. But as it is too long, and combats nothing set forth by our correspondent J. E. and C. S. D., we have concluded to close the subject for the present. The remarks in the letter seem to imply that the enemies of compulsory education were also enemies to education; whereas the contrary is really the case. They only argue that school education alone will not work a moral reform, and that compulsion is that matter is unwise, and would be a dead letter if enacted. But they say educate all by all means, but do it on the principal of voluntary attendance, except in case of the notoriously vicious.

There is a neat little discussion of "Our School Books" going on between the Chief Superintendent, Messrs Campbell, and some remarks relating thereto in the Globe. We cannot help thinking but that good will some out of it. The books require to be changed or revised, or something done to meet the wants of schools, and this present discussion awakens such a spirit of enquiry into book matters that every book will be likely to receive considerable attention from the critics. Let us hope that neither power, position nor opposition will have the effect of forcing a worthless series of books on the public, to suit the whims or the interests of any man or set of men. We want the best books and at the cheapest rates, and, by all means, uniform also.

The minutes of the Council of North Monaghan have been received, but too late for this issue.

Presentation.

The numerous friends (in Ashburnham) of W. Glover, Esq. on the occasion of his leaving for the United States, took the opportunity of presenting him last evening with a beautiful copy of the Holy Bible as a token of their esteem for him, and the appreciation of his labours to promote the moral and spiritual advancement of the community. Mr. Glover has been most attentive to Sabbath schools, prayer meetings, Sabbath meetings, and every good work in the village. We are not able to give particulars this week.

Royal Scarlet Chapter.

A meeting of the Royal Scarlet Chapter of the District of Peterborough will open on Monday evening, 14th instant, in the Orange Hall, Peterboro', at 8 o'clock p. m.

Fire in Manilla.

On Friday last, about 5 o'clock, p. m., the dwelling house and waggon shop of D. McLean, in the village of Manilla, was consumed by fire; also the dwelling of Mr. John Clark. The dwelling of the Rev. Mr. Campbell, Presbyterian Minister, was saved with difficulty, but his furniture was badly injured. The dwelling of Mr. J. Johnston was also for a time in danger, but was saved.—Mr. McLean lost nearly all his furniture and clothing. Mrs. McLean, being sick in bed at the time, was barely saved from the flames. Mr. Clark's loss is over $1000; the building was insured for $500 in the Provincial. We did not learn the entire loss. About two years since the village suffered severely from fire.

THE REFORM BILL.—Latest reports inform us that the Reform Bill, so much talked of and looked for, has passed its second reading. On Saturday, the 28th ult., the final debate ended, and, on division, there were 318 for it, and 313 against, leaving a majority of only 5.

FENIANS IN BELLEVILLE.—From a paragraph in the Intelligencer we gather that there is an Hibernian Benevolent Society in that place, but the Head Centre is considered a brainless, loose tongued, good-for-nothing creature.

ROBBERIES.—The Intelligencer also gives an account of the capture of the chief of a gang of robbers who have been stealing horses, boots, money, valuables, and even communion cups from the churches have been found with him. The hopeful's name is Wellington Young.

Two American forgers have been detected in Canada, one was taken at the Suspension Bridge and the other in Hamilton. It is not known whether they will be tried at Hamilton or some other place.

ASHBURNHAM COUNCIL.

May 7th, 1866.

The Council of Ashburnham met on the 7th instant, pursuant to adjournment.

Present—the Reeve and Messrs. Mowry, Clark and Sutherland.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed.

On motion of Mr. Mowry, John Craig was appointed overseer of streets and bridges for the current year.

On motion of Mr. Mowry, Messrs. Lud gate, Sutherland and the mover were appointed street and bridge committee.

On motion of Mr. Clark, Malcolm McGregor and Jas. Stratton were appointed health inspectors for the year; and a By-law was passed to that effect, also defining their duties.

A By-law was passed for the better government of the Municipality.

A By-law to regulate markets and tolls in the Village went through two readings, and will be brought up at next meeting of Council.

On motion of Mr. Sutherland the assessor's salary for 1866 was ordered to be paid.

An account from Mr. J. Lockhart for work done, was laid over to next meeting of the Council.

A communication from Rev. M. Burnham in relation to the cricket ground was received but no action was taken till next meeting of Council.

On motion of Mr. Sutherland, the Reeve was apointed to make arrangements with some fit and proper person as constable for the Village; also to have the Health By-law, the Market By-law and the By law for the better government of the Village printed.

The Council adjourned for two weeks.

The deliberations of the Medical Council held in Toronto are given, and are about to cause considerable dissatisfaction. The Council have added to the subjects of examination for matriculants, making Greek one of them, and it is argued that, inasmuch as this is not required in Lower Canada, nor in England, that it will have the effect of driving all medical students to McGill College, to the injury of Upper Canada College.—The following is the standard for an examination for matriculation finally adopted by the Council:—

1st. That all students pass an examination in general education before they commence their professional studies.

2nd. That the time of commencing professional studies be understood to be from the date of their having passed their preliminary examination, and that no qualified body shall receive a student without his having first obtained a certificate of examination.

3rd. That a degree of arts of any British or Canadian University, or of such other Universities as may be recognized from time to time by the Medical Council, be accepted as a sufficient qualification to enter upon the study of medicine.

4th. That the examination in general education be left entirely to one examiner to be appointed by the members of the Medical Council and that the examination take place every three months, and that the President or one or more members of the Council must be present at each.

5th. That the following be the subject of examination to be undergone by all matriculants in medicine:

1—Reading aloud a passage from some English authors.
2—Writing from dictation.
3—English grammar.
4—Writing a short English composition.
5—Arithmetic including vulgar and decimal fractions.
6—Questions in geography generally.
7—General history.
8—The elements of natural philosophy.
10—Algebra to simple equations inclusive.
11—Translation of a passage from the first book of Cæsar's Commentaries de bello Gallico, and Gregory's Conspectus first five chapters.
12—Translation of a passage from St. John's Gospel in Greek. In all these subjects the quality of the hen writing and spelling will be taken into account.

6th. That all students that undergo the required examination be obligated to pay five dollars prior to examination, and it the event of failure that only three dollars of the sum deposited be returned

No Greek examination shall be demanded of applicants before the 1st of May, 1867.

Joseph A. Fife, M. D., has been appointed associate coroner for this county.

A STRONG WARNING TO BOYS.

Three children drowned at Oakville and [illegible] others narrowly escaped on Wednesday morning. The party consisting of two boys and three girls aged respectively: 15, 13, 10, 8, 3, all of one family named Welsh entered a small scow, and the boys commenced to paddle her along with poles keeping close in shore, and in calm unruffled water. But, unfortunately, in rounding a point of land, a sudden gust of wind blew their frail bark out into deeper water, and out of the depth of their poles. Of course, they were unable to bring the boat in again. There were no oars on board, and if there had been, it does not appear that any of the children knew how to use them. The wind blew strong from off the shore, the boat drifted further and further away from land, until it passed altogether from out of sight and hearing. The knowledge of the mishap caused intense excitement in Oakville, and soon Captain Murray, with a boat's crew from the vessel, the Mary Grover, and Mr. Robt. Melbourne, started in search of the missing ones. The search was prosecuted by them for hours without success. Meanwhile, the schooner Oneida, of Oswego, commanded by Captain Faulkner, and bound down the lake, discovered the scow keel uppermost. The schooner immediately bore up to it, and on reaching it, found two boys on the top of it alive, and one of their sisters lying between them—dead! She had perished from the combined effects of cold, exhaustion and affright, and the other two girls had been washed overboard when the scow capsized, and were entombed beneath the waters of Lake Ontario. Captain Faulkner, on ascertaining from the two boys where they resided, immediately made for Oakville and restored them to their agonised mother. The poignant anguish of the poor woman, on finding herself thus suddenly deprived of her three daughters, may perhaps be imagined, but certainly cannot be described. This sad occurrence has cast a gloom over the whole neighborhood.

ALMOST AN ACCIDENT.

While the train from Lindsay to Port Hope was crossing Galloway's Bridge on Tuesday last, a bolt fastening the truck of one of the cars gave way, throwing the car off the track, and causing imminent danger to the large number of passengers on board, and the entire train of being precipitated to the ground, a distance of about seventy feet. Fortunately, Mr. Fisk, the Conductor seeing the mishap, an knowing the danger resulting therefrom, with the most commendable presence of mind, and at the peril of his own life succeeded in stopping the train, but not a moment too soon, as had it moved another foot it would in all probability have tumbled over the side of the bridge, dragging the other cars and passengers with it, to almost certain destruction. We believe there is not another road in Canada runs with greater care, or whose employees are more efficient than the Port Hope, Lindsay and Beaverton Railway and the Peterboro branch. The almost total absence of accidents upon this road is evident proof of this. During the many years the road has been in operation there has never been a passenger injured, except by their own wilful carelessness. The bridge upon which the mishap occurred has frequently been spoken of by the enemies of the road as unsafe but the severe ordeal through which it passed on Tuesday last, proves it to be of extraordinary strength. Had this been an embankment, instead of a bridge, there is scarcely a doubt but the train would have been precipitated off it, as the ties and rails would not have sustained the same pressure that the bridge did without giving way. The traffic on the road was only interrupted while the car was being again placed upon the track.—British Canadian Port Hope.

DISINFECTANTS.—Is nothing to be done in Toronto to supply the poorer classes with the means of destroying impurities in the neighbourhood of their dwellings? Other cities are doing effective work in this direction. The city of London is distributing lime, conveying it to the houses of the poor in carts. The Corporation of Kingston have ordered some hundred bushels of charcoal and a large quantity of lime, for distribution, at low prices, among the citizens. They have also ordered four tons of green vitriol, or sulphate of iron, which is procurable in New York, and can be laid down in Kingston at $25 per ton. This article is strongly recommended by the Central Board of Health. One dollar's worth, it is said, will answer every purpose in a family during the season. It ought to be sold at a fixed rate in all the druggists' shops, and distributed whenever necessary among the poorer classes.—Globe.

THE MEASURES OF NEXT SESSION.—It is asserted in well-informed circles that parliament has been called chiefly with a view to pushing certain important measures rendered necessary by the abrogation of the reciprocity treaty. The session will probably last for some four or five weeks, and then will be adjourned until some time in the fall, perhaps November, when it is expected that all obstacles to confederation will have been removed.—The Leader.

SPECIMENS OF CANADIAN TIMBER.—A number of specimens of our forest trees, to be sent to the Paris Exhibition next year, are now at the office of Messrs. Hamilton & Brothers, Sussex street. They were procured at the suggestion of Dr. Taché, Deputy to the Minister of Agriculture, somewhere up the Gatineau, and comprise all the different kinds of wood of Canada.—Ottawa Citizen.

A young man named Bradshaw, clerk in a grain store in Toronto, and who decamped a few days ago with eight thousand dollars, also took an additional four hundred dollars from his employer, who could ill afford to be thus robbed by a scamp, in whom he had confided. He has not been heard of since.

The Fenian prisoners at Cornwall have been committed for trial at the Fall Assizes. There was much difference of opinion among the magistrates, but a majority were in favor of committal.

It is rumored in commercial circles that there is to be an amalagation between the Bank of British North America, the Bank of Montreal, and the Oriental Bank of London.—Ottawa Evening Post.

The Governor General has arrived at Ottawa, and was honored with a befitting reception, and several addresses. Rideau Hall is the name of the mansion he occupies.

The Pilot who brought the pest Ship England into Halifax has since died, as also two members of his family. He said before his death that he did not board the vessel, but merely towed in her wake, whence he gave the necessary directions. The effluvia nevertheless sufficed to communicate the cholera.

The Kingston (Jamaica) papers say that Messrs. Delisle and Smith, of the Special Commission from British North America, had a most satisfactory interview with the merchants of Jamaica. They have returned to Canada by way of New York, going to that city in the steamship Crusader.

CHOLERA IN NEW YORK.—Health officers' report shows three new cases and three deaths since last return. Sixty-five convalescent patients have been transferred from the hospital ship to the ship Saratoga, leaving only forty-seven in the hospital. Total number of deaths by cholera, 50.

The cholera has almost entirely disappeared from McNab's Island, near Halifax, and there is not a single case in the city. Some cases of typhoid and spottal fever, which followed in the wake of the cholera, continued to require the attention of the medical officers on the 25th ult.

HALIFAX, N. S., May 7.—The steamer Malta, from Newfoundland, reports that the ship William Penn, from Havre for New York, touched at St. Joseph, Newfoundland, on the 28th ultimo. She had Head Centre James Stephens on board.

Annexation and the New Party.

(From the Halifax Unionist.)

On Friday last Hon. Mr. Howe, ex-premier, or we were summoned to a Caucus, held, we learn, at Mr. Killam's lodgings, on this city,—held with a view of organizing to oppose the British Government, and all who support it, in the matter of Confederation. What the line of action is to be we have not exactly learned. A number of those who voted the minority vote in both Houses were present.

Mr. Killam, in his speech in the House made no bones of the matter, as will be seen when it is reported, and went for "Annexation." If there is to be any change—for "Annexation." pure and simple. This, of course, Mr. Howe was hoisted on to, and the next day, or two days after, he is found holding a secret Caucus at Mr. Killam's Museum. We leave it for the people now to draw their own conclusions.

More Evidence Against "Mike" Murphy.

The Hamilton Spectator says that the police authorities, on Friday last, became possessed of the following document, which was found upon the person of an individual in that city:

"Toronto, April 24, 1866.

"This is to certify that the bearer, Michael Dixon, is a man in the good standing of the Toronto Circle of the Fenian Brotherhood, established by the authority of the H. C. for America, John O'Mahoney, in 1864.

"MONEY MURIARTY,
"Head of Circle, Toronto.
"MICHAEL MURPHY, C. O."

If the document should prove to be genuine and that the signature can be brought home to Murphy, it will be positive proof that, as the representative of a treasonable organization, he has been plotting against the government for some time.

A telegram from Vienna confirms the news that Austria, in reply to the Prussian note of the 15th April, has submitted propositions for mutual disarmament. The proposals are as follows:—

Austria and Prussia shall each restore their military establishments to the statu quo which existed prior to the late defensive measures. That the 25th of April be the date for the mutual disarmament. Austria consents to disarm on that day, and is willing that Prussia should disarm only on the 26th.

The Austrian proposition is said to have been communicated to Paris and London, where it has been cordially approved.

At the next sitting of the Federal Diet the communication will, it is said, be made, announcing that the question of disarmament is in a fair way for settlement.

A SAD SCENE.—A singular and sad scene occurred at a funeral near Weldenport on the 7th inst. It is customary in that part of the country to open the coffin in the chapel immediately before interment, to give attending friends a last view of the deceased. At the time referred to, the funeral procession of a Miss Beaslip were being observed, and as the young man whose office it was to finally close the coffin, was in the act of doing so, he fell over the communion rail and expired. His name was Phillip Starr. He was was a neighbor and friend of the deceased, in the prime of life, and with every appearance of long life before him.

Mrs. Jefferson Davis left Montreal for Fortress Monroe, with permission to visit her husband. She is a woman of superior personal appearance and manners, with a highly cultivated mind, and admirable power of conversation. They have a son at the Bishop's College, Lennoxville, and a little daughter at the Convent of the Sacred Heart, Sault-au-Recollet. Her mother and two sisters are residents of Montreal.

The ladies of Watertown, N. Y., have presented the Fenians with a flag embroidered with their own hands.

A GOOD BOOK.

"There is much pleasure and profit in the employment of a good hour, and two very little of either of these is to please many classes of readers. Books, however, are to please all kinds of the best sort. We think of the blessed at their best. Of their condition can be improved and rendered more valuable and needed to their owners, to effect which, there is nothing equal to "Darley's Ambient Heave Remedy and Condition Medicine;" it has effected astonishing results in thousands of cases. 14

Among the most important of modern Medical discoveries, stands the Canadian Pain Destroyer.

As a Family Medicine, it is well and favorably known, relieving thousands from pain in the Side, Back and Head, Croup, Colds, Sore Throat, Spasms, Bruises, Cramps in the Stomach, Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Bowel Complaints, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, &c. &c. The Canadian Pain Destroyer has now been before the Public for a length of time, and wherever used is well liked, never failing in a single instance to give persistent relief promptly used. Call for we have never known a single case of dissatisfaction, where the Directions have been properly followed, but on the contrary all are delighted with its operations, and speak in the highest terms of its Virtues and highest effects.

We speak from experience in this matter, having tested it, thoroughly, and therefore those who are suffering from any of the complaints for which it is recommended may depend upon its being a Sovereign Remedy.

The astonishing efficacy of the Canadian Pain Destroyer, on curing the diseases for which it is recommended, and its wonderful success in subduing the torturing pains of Rheumatism, and in removing Nervous Affections, entitle it to a high rank in the list of remedies for these complaints. Endorsers coming in from Medicine Dealers, in all parts of the Country for further supplies, endorsed testifying as to the universal satisfaction it gives.

The Canadian Pain destroyer never fails to give immediate relief. All Medicine dealers keep it. Physicians order and use it; and so family will be without it after once trying it. Price only Twenty-five cents per Bottle.

All orders should be addressed to

BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY IN CANADA.

The following testimony from a well known and highly respected Merchant of Pictou, is corroborative of the general approval given to Dr. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY:

Pictou, C. W., Dec. 9th, 1859.

Messrs. S. W. Fowle & Co., Boston.

Gentlemen: -

Being solicited by your Travelling Agent, for an expression of opinion of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, I with pleasure assert that it is, in my belief, the best remedy before the public for coughs and pulmonary complaints.

Having tested the article with myself and family, in case of severe coughs and colds, for years, with uniform and unexceptionable success, I unhesitatingly recommend it with full confidence in its merits.

Yours truly,
ALFRED HOOKER.

None genuine unless signed, I. Butts, on the wrapper. Prepared by Seth W. Fowle & Co., Boston, and for sale by all dealers in medicines.

PROSPECTUS
The Daily Telegraph.

AT the present crisis of Provincial affairs, the publishers feel that there is room in the City of Toronto for an independent evening journal, which, without party spirit, shall discuss dispassionately the important issues now occupying so large a share of public attention. Journals fettered by political ties, and biassed by particular interests, are not free to present to their readers these issues in the broad and comprehensive manner which is now more than ever desirable. In addition to this, events now crowd so thickly upon us that the public naturally desire more frequent supplies of information than the morning papers can give. To meet these desiderata the publication of THE DAILY TELEGRAPH is designed. Although attached to no political party,

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH

will give no uncertain sound upon public affairs. Amongst other things, it will advocate:—

1. British Connection, strenuously opposing the formation of any political union with the neighbouring Republic.
2. Confederation of the British North American Provinces so soon as the full consent of the Maritime Provinces is obtained. This measure is imperatively required by the hostile commercial and political attitude of the United States government. It is, moreover, desirable as forming the germ of nationality which may be further developed in the future.
3. Free Trade, as far as is compatible with the necessities of the revenue; also, a renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty with our neighbors as soon as they are prepared to treat with us upon just and equitable terms.
4. The encouragement of Emigration and a more liberal management of the public lands, so as to promote the opening up of our waste territory, and its occupation by bona fide settlers.
5. The Extension of Trade Relations with other British colonies and with foreign nations.
6. In British affairs moderate and judicious reform, but not violent organic change in a Democratic direction.

Other public questions, as they arise, will be dealt with in the same moderate and liberal spirit.

During the approaching session of Parliament its proceedings will be duly reported, and at all times the latest intelligence received up to the time of going to press will be published.

The Markets and matters of interest to commercial men will receive special attention in THE DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Of all local matters of public importance, courts of law, school boards, public meetings, &c., &c., full and accurate reports will be given. To the proceedings of the City Council special attention will be given, and in corporation matters THE DAILY TELEGRAPH will, conformably to the present practice, give an unswerving support to those who faithfully serve the interests of the city, irrespective of party and political leanings.

At the same time it will unsparingly expose all abuses and denounce all corruption, no matter who the guilty parties may be.

The first number will be issued on the 21st May, neatly printed on good white paper, delivered to subscribers at the rate of $3 per year, payable in advance, or ten cents per week—Subscriptions by post, $4.50 per annum, invariably in advance.

WHOLESALE AGENTS 26

$10 A DAY to AGENTS.

LLOYD'S GREAT TOPOGRAPHICAL RAILWAY and COUNTY MAP of ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND and WALES—Six feet large, mounted and varnished; cost $100,000 and four years time; was finished July 28, and is the best map ever made since the world was formed; shows 200,000 cities, towns, villages, market places, post offices, castles, country seats, and 38,000 railways and railway stations, with the distance between each station marked plainly, and the official name and total length of each railway in actual operation up to June, 1865, is given. The railway stations are all numerically and alphabetically arranged. The lakes, rivers, hills and mountains are exhibited, with the altitude of each in feet, made from trigonometrical surveys by our own engineers, draughtsmen and Photographers sent to England expressly to make a superior map of that country; the whole engraved on steel, colored superbly in counties, mounted and varnished. Price 6 shillings sterling ($3). No map at $20 can compare to this. Canvassers throughout the world wanted. Also men, with a small capital, to go to Canada, Chicago, Cincinnati, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, East and West Indies, Australia and California, to open offices. Can make a fortune wholesaling this and other maps to sub-agents. Eighty thousand copies of this map were subscribed for in England before going to press, as can be shown by our agents' letters to us. Ten new maps now under way

See what the most popular and widely circulated periodicals say of our Establishment:

From the "Dispatch" of February 28, 1865.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the announcement of Messrs. Devaugh & Co.'s Great Sale of Jewelry, Silver Ware, and Fancy Goods, in our advertising columns. We are personally acquainted with the members of this firm and know them to be gentlemen of sterling worth and integrity. Their stock of goods, for variety and extent, we have scarcely seen paralleled.

From the "Mirror of Fashion," March 1, 1865.

Messrs. Devaugh & Co.'s Great Sale of Jewelry, etc., opened on the 15th ult., and we venture to say that no finer display of goods was ever exhibited by any establishment in this city. The ladies thronged their banner almost to suffocation, although the streets were rendered nearly impassable by the melted snow and slush. We predict for them a wonderful success.

From the "Ledger," February 28, 1865.

Our lady friends should visit the extensive establishment of Messrs. Devaugh & Co., No. 15 Maiden Lane, if they wish to include themselves with a sight which they will long remember. Such a profusion of elegant Watches, Chains, Rings, Earrings, and, in short, of Jewelry of every name, kind and description, we never before witnessed. Their silver and plated ware is superb and almost casts into the shade the other splendid establishments which have long been the boast of our city. It is estimated that their stock is worth not less than one million of dollars.

How You Can Get a Prize.

Send Twenty-Five Cents to us, and as soon as we receive it we will mail you a Certificate, showing what you are entitled to. If the article or articles please you, send back the Certificate and One Dollar and we will forward you the article, no matter how costly it may be. If the article is not what you wish, state, when you send the Certificate and dollar, what other article of the same value you prefer and we will send it. If you wish more than one Certificate send us $1 and we will send five; for $2, eleven; for $5, thirty; for $10, sixty; for $18, one hundred.

Agents are wanted in the Army and in every place. We have an immense stock of goods to dispose of, and need a large number of Agents. Our terms to Agents are very liberal and some even of our Lady Agents are making from $5 to $20 a day. We give Agents 50 per cent. on all Certificates they sell provided they remit not less than $1 for eight.

☞ Write your name and address distinctly and say only what is necessary.

PIANO-FORTES

DRIGGS' NEW PATENT.

ARE THE ONLY INSTRUMENTS constructed on a truly scientific principle That have greater strength, and will remain longer in tune than any other Piano. The construction is simple and natural, all the extraneous lumber in the body of the instrument is dispensed with; the sound boards are merely two arched planks of thin wood, like the front and back of a violin; the stringe are attached to a strong iron frame, which is separate and entirely independent of the case, thereby dispensing with the old harp form of stringing by substituting straight bridges, preserving at the same time The Over String Bass, of which Mr Driggs is the inventor. By these improvements we gain much more vibratory power, at the same time preserving all its purity and richness of tone.

They have received the highest testimonials from the Press, and all the principal artists in the country, among which are:

Harry Sanderson,	L. M. Gottschalk,
Max Maretzek,	S. Thalberg,
Theodore Eisfield,	Wm Mason,
Herman Wollenhaupt,	A. Barili,
Francis H. Brown,	M. Strackosch,
Wm. Henry Fry,	Charles Fradel

Mr. EGESMUND THALBERG, the great pianist, says:—I have examined your new Piano-fortes and I cordially approve of its system of construction. Its principle, by which great increase of vibratory power is obtained, being very simple and perfectly philosophical. The tone is grand and noble; it has great capacity for sustaining the sound or singing, and its volume of tone or power I have never heard excelled in depth, purity and sympathetic sweetness.

Wm. HENRY FRY, late musical critic of the N. Y. Tribune says:—I have examined your newly invented Piano-Fortes. They merit all the praise given to them by Messrs. Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strackosch, Mason and others. As regards the structure, they are original and philosophical; in purity, volume, and continuity of tone; in vocal versibilitude, that crowning excelence which enables the pianists to "sing" on the instrument. Your Pianos deserve the highest rank. Your invention, in my opinion, is destined to work radical changes in the manufacture of Pianos throughout the world.

From the N. Y. Herald, Sept. 5—Upon a careful examination of Driggs Piano-Forte, we find the results obtained are a very fine singing tone, great purity and brilliancy throughout the entire instrument, not often found in Pianos constructed upon the old plan.

The N. Y. Times, July 12, says:—We have now an instrument without an equal. It can sing with a smoothe delicacy, perfectly unattainable on any other instrument; an ordinary player obtains with no exertion, the fullness of a Grand Piano Forte and they must speedily supersede the old styles.

GENTLEMEN:—Having thoroughly examined and tested the Piano-Fortes invented and patented by Mr S. B. Dupee, I am of the opinion that the tone resulting from his improvements, as exhibited in the instruments under examination, in point of richness, depth and brilliancy, equals that of the best Grand Piano-Fortes, and excells them in pure, musical and actual tone, power thus approximating closer to what I consider perfection in the instrument than has yet been achieved by any other system of manufacture.

Yours respectfully,
L. M. GOTTSCHALK.

GREAT IMPROVEMENT IN

SEWING MACHINES.

EMPIRE SHUTTLE MACHINE!

PATENTED FEB. 14th, 1860.

Salesrooms, { 536 Broadway, New York, / 252 Washington St., Boston.

THIS MACHINE is constructed on entirely new principles of mechanism, possessing many rare and valuable improvements, having been examined by the most profound experts, and pronounced to be

Simplicity and Perfection Combined.

It has a straight needle, perpendicular action, makes the lock or shuttle stitch, which will neither rip nor ravel, and is alike on both sides; performs perfect sewing on every description of material, from leather to the finest Nansook Muslin, with cotton, linen or silk thread, from the coarsest to the finest number. Having neither CAM nor COGWHEEL, and the least possible friction, it runs as smooth as glass and is

Emphatically a Noiseless Machine.

It requires FIFTY PER CENT less power to drive it than any other Machine in the market. A girl twelve years of age can work it steadily, without fatigue or injury to health

Its strength and Wonderful Simplicity of construction renders it alm st impossible to get out of order, and is GUARANTEED by the Company to give entire satisfaction.

We respectfully invite all those who may desire to supply themselves with a superior article, to come and examine the Unrivalled Machine.

Built in a more especial manner do we elicit the patronage of

Merchant Tailors,	Corset Makers,
Coach Makers,	Gaiter Fitters,
Hoop Skirt Manufacturers,	Shoe Binders,
Shirt and Bosom Makers.	Vest and Pantaloon Makers.
	Dress Makers.

Religious and Charitable Institution will be liberally dealt with.

One half-hour's instruction is sufficient to enable any person to work the Machine to their entire satisfaction.

Agents wanted for all Towns in the United States, where agents are not already established. Also for Cuba, Mexico, Central and South America, to whom a liberal discount will be given.

Relief in Ten Minutes.

BRYAN'S

PULMONIC WAFERS!

The most certain and speedy remedy ever discovered for all diseases of the Chest and Lungs, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Consumption, Bronchitis, Influenza, Hoarseness, Difficult Breathing, Sore Throat &c. &c.

THESE Wafers give the most instantaneous and perfect relief, when persevered with according to directions never fail to effect a rapid and lasting cure. Thousands have been restored to perfect health, who have tried other means in vain. To all classes and all constitutions they are a blessing and cure—none need despair, no matter how long the disease may have existed, or how severe it may be, provided the organic structure of the vital system is not hopelessly decayed. Every one afflicted should give them an impartial trial.

TO VOCALISTS AND PUBLIC SPEAKERS.

These Wafers are peculiarly valuable, they will in one day remove the most severe hoarseness or soreness and their regular use for a few days will, at all times, increase the power and flexibility of the voice, greatly improving its tone, compass, and clearness, at which purpose they are regularly used by many Professional Vocalists.

GUARANTEE.—After a fair trial, if any purchaser does not regard the Finkle & Lyon Sewing Machine as superior to any machine in market, he can return it and have his money. It has taken many of the highest prizes.—Is less complicated than any other first class machine,—does a wider range of work without changing,—requires no taking apart to clean or oil, and no "lessons" to set needle, regulate tension, or o, erate machine.

N. B. Any Clergyman sending us two orders for Machines, shall receive one for himself as a present. The same proposition is extended to Professors and Teachers.

We have now completed our New Manufactory at a cost of some $200,000, including New Patents and important improvements; and the object of the above proposition is to secure the immediate introduction of our improved machine into every town in the United States without incurring the great expense of a travelling agent.

This proposition cannot avail in towns occupied by our own agents

Please send for descriptive Catalogue, with samples of sewing.

The Daily Telegraph.

AT the present crisis of Provincial affairs, the publishers feel that there is room in the City of Toronto for an independent evening Journal, which, without party spirit, shall discuss dispassionately the important issues now occupying so large a share of public attention. Journals fettered by political ties, and biassed by particular interests, are not free to present to their readers these issues in the broad and comprehensive manner which is now more than ever desirable. In addition to this, every man is thickly upon us that the public naturally desire more frequent supplies of information than the morning papers can give. To meet these desiderata the publication of THE DAILY TELEGRAPH is designed. Although attached to no political party,

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH

will give no uncertain sound upon public affairs Amongst other things, it will advocate:—

1. British Connection, strenuously opposing the formation of any political union with the neighbouring Republic.

2. Confederation of the British North American Provinces as soon as the full consent of the Maritime Provinces is obtained. This measure is imperatively required by the hostile commercial and political attitude of the United States government. It is, moreover, desirable as forming the germ of nationality which may be further developed in the future.

3. Free Trade, so far as is compatible with the necessities of the revenue; also, a renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty with our neighbours as soon as they are prepared to treat with us upon just and equitable terms.

4. The encouragement of Emigration and a more liberal management of the public lands so as to promote the opening up of our wild territory and its occupation by bona fide settlers.

5. The Extension of Trade Relations with other British colonies and with foreign nations.

6. In British affairs moderate and judicious reform, but not violent organic change in a Democratic direction.

Other public questions, as they arise, will be dealt with in the same moderate and liberal spirit.

During the approaching session of Parliament its proceedings will be duly reported, and at all times the latest intelligence received up to the time of going to press will be published.

The Markets and matters of interest to commercial men will receive special attention in THE DAILY TELEGRAPH

Of all local matters of public importance, courts of law, school boards, public meetings, &c., &c., full and accurate report will be given. To the proceedings of the City Council special attention will be given and in connection matters THE DAILY TELEGRAPH will, contrary to the present practice, give an unswerving support to those who faithfully serve the interests of the city, irrespective of party and political leanings.

At the same time it will unsparingly expose all abuses and denounce all corruption, no matter who the guilty parties may be.

The first number will be issued on the 21st May, neatly printed on good white paper, delivered to subscribers at the rate of $5 per year, payable in advance; or ten cents per week.—Subscriptions by post, $4.50 per annum, invariably in advance.

Poetry.

TWO LITTLE PAIRS OF BOOTS.

Two little pairs of boots, to-night,
Before the fire are drying;
Two little pairs of tired feet
In a trundle bed are lying.
The tracks they left upon the floor
Make me feel like sighing!

Those little boots with copper toes!
They ran the livelong day
And sometimes I almost wish
That they were miles away;
I'm tired and I to bear so oft
Their heavy tramp at play.

They walk about the new ploughed ground,
Where mud in plenty lies;
They roll it up in marble round,
They bake it into pies.
And then at night upon the floor
In every shape it dries!

To-day I was disposed to scold;
But when I look, to-night,
At those little boots before the fire
With copper toes so bright,
I think how sad my heart would be
To put them out of sight.

For, in a trunk up stairs I've laid
Two socks of white and blue;
It called to put those boots away,
O God, what should I do?
I mourn that they're so new, to-night,
Three pairs instead of two.

I mourn because I thought how nice
My neighbour 'cross the way
Could keep her carpets all the year
From getting worn or gray;
Yet well I know she'd smile to own
Some little boots to-day!

We mothers weary get and worn
Over our load of cares;
But how we speak to little ones
Let each of us beware;
What would our fireside be to-night,
If no little boots were there!

FILIPPO PALMA, OR, THE POWER OF MUSIC.

The rich old miser and pawnbroker, Griffo, was about to close his store and retire to his solitary sleeping apartment. He threw a quick searching glance about him—pianos, guitars, household furniture of every kind and description, with the necessaries of the poor, or the extravagance of the rich had gathered there, strewed the room in strange confusion.

After cautiously surveying the whole, and satisfying himself that no thief was concealed within, who could despoil him of his hoarded treasures, he turned to close the door, when a young man stepped upon the threshold. His elegant mantle only partially concealed the richness of his dress and the symmetry of his form; he might have been about twenty-five years of age, and withal looked so gay, and glad, and life loving that the old miser drew back amazed. Gracefully raising his hat, he disclosed a profusion of glossy, raven curls, and a face that might have served a painter for an Adonis or Endymion. His eyes fell upon the grave, parchment-like features of the old usurer, and though he could not restrain a smile yet he failed to banish the traces of care which saddened his brow.

'Bravo, my young lord,' exclaimed Griffo. 'I call you a man of your word. I have always said that the noble youth of Rome, and indeed of all Italy, might safely take for their model Signor Filippo Palma.'

'None know so well as he how to live—how to circulate money, and none so punctual to return a borrowed loan.'

'It grieves me much, Signor Griffo, that this time I am ill deserve the praise with which you overwhelm me. I know that to-day I should have repaid the small sum.'

'Small sum! small sum! you owe me a hundred ducats, and to day I counted upon it. I let it, too, without a pledge, bethink you, upon your honest face; but certainly you have brought it with interest, and you wish to joke me.'

'Would to God it were so,' rejoined Filippo, 'but believe me, we singers carry empty pockets while the Carnival lasts; our opera managers cannot pay until Shrovetide is over. Meanwhile we must live; therefore I have come to beg you to double that loan, and let me have another hundred ducats on my honest face.'

'The d—l take me! if that is not a rare joke,' said the astonished Griffo. 'Do you think I have found my money or stolen it, that I can throw it after you as you scatter your light songs among the silly crowd? No, no, I will teach you better, I have your bond, and if I cannot jingle both money and interest in my purse this day you shall go to the debtor's prison, and there celebrate your carnival, unless, indeed, your manager or the foolish song-roving rabble of Rome will redeem you.'

'Pray listen to reason, Signor Griffo. If you should stand me upon my head not a single ducat would fall out of my pocket; wait only until the carnival is over and you shall see; the manager will then pay me my arrears, and perhaps, also, I shall be the bridegroom of a rich lady whose love I seek now to woo. I do entreat you, good Griffo, let me have the money, draw up the bond, and I will sign it.'

'A wife,' said Griffo, thoughtfully, 'a widow, perhaps an heiress, who is she, and now far has the matter gone?'

'Not so far as you think; neither do I know who she is. I have seen her only twice, but more is not necessary to fall desperately in love—the thing is soon finished for she seems to be unmarried, and to all appearance, is blessed with every earthly good.'

'I will listen to you no longer you young madcap; you shall go to prison to-day if you cannot give me full satisfaction or furnish me responsible security;' and hereupon the old niggard flew into a paroxysm of rage, and poured forth a perfect torrent of curses, all of which Filippo received with the most imperturbable gravity.

Resolved upon obtaining the loan and hoping to gain a respite as soon as the storm had passed by, Filippo immediately stepped to an open piano and began to play a favorite gay which had lately gained him much applause. Seeing, however, that Griffo's wrath was rather in the flow than on the ebb, he seated himself, and began to sing the same, which he supported with a vigorous accompaniment. He holl at first no other intention than to show his firm resolution, and to appear as unembarrassed and as much at his ease as possible; but when he perceived that the old man listened with astonishment, he began to sing in a style worthy of Filippo Palma, the most celebrated singer of his time.

A mirror h gain opposite reflected the face of the miser, and Filippo watched with anxious interest the various emotions which passed through his soul and wrought into life his stern, rigid features. At first the muscles of his face relaxed and expanded as the full deep tones trembled through the hall; then as the swelling waves of rich melody rose and sank in wild sport and play, the angular traits as gradually formed themselves into a sweet smile, and the man of gain, who had until now listened only to the sound of gold, stood spell-bound; a light was in his leaden, soulless eye, and his lips trembled. It was as though an angel of beauty had touched him with his magic wand, so complete was the transformation; the clear rich tones of melody fell upon his soul as the warm, bright rays of the sun upon the earth after a long rainy season. As Palma at last with a lively emotion and brilliant passage drew toward the close, Griffo could no longer remain quiet in his corner; he strove to express by the motion of his limbs the spirit of music; nonsensely he moved that he might not by an unlucky step interrupt the sweet-toned stream of enchanting melody. As the aria was concluded, and Griffo stood panting, wiping the perspiration from his forehead, the singer stepped up to him with a smile and said:—

'How is it Signor Griffo? will you loan me the ducats now; or will you at least listen to my explanations, and not interrupt me with your curses?'

'Curses, I curse!—no Heaven forbid—the money I will count out directly, my son. You are a magician, and have bewitched me. Upon your honest face or your golden voice, I loan it without interest, if it must be so.'

'No, no, that is more than I ask, my worthy sir. Be assured you do me a great favor which I shall not forget after the carnival, when I am a happy bridegroom and a rich man.' Filippo quickly gathered up the money and vanished through the street door, and Griffo awoke as from a heavy dream, to a consciousness of what he had done. At first he seemed to repent his generosity, then shaking his grey locks, involuntarily exclaimed, 'He has a voice! he can sing, and bewitch with his songs.—He shall teach my Elsetta.'

The carnival was brilliant and magnificent, but passed far too quickly for Filippo. He had not, as formerly, celebrated it with his gay companions. He was seeking his unknown love! one amid the crowd of masks, and too often found himself sadly disappointed. His gold at last engaged an old woman to bring information to her, and also deceived all watching eyes which guarded the beautiful unknown; through her he received a few lines from the lady containing, however, nothing but a promise to meet him on the coming Sunday. True, he had seen and spoken with her on the evening of the last day of the carnival, and confessed his love; but while he listened to her the sweet words of life that trembled unexpressed upon her lips, the dense crowd separated him from the fair one, and instead the bravos of a hundred mocking voices greeted as they locked on and boisterously applauded the farce.

Filippo sat in his lonely room in sorrow and silence, when the door suddenly opened and Griffo stood before him, the sight of whose face recalled his uncancelled obligation, and struck new terror to the unhappy lover. The object of his visit, however, was by no means such as Filippo had anticipated; he came to assure his young friend that the sweet strains of his golden song were yet floating through his brain, and to request that he would give his daughter lessons, with which she might gladden and solace his old age. Palma was not more surprised at this request than the news that he had a daughter, whom he had never seen or heard of, though he had been a long time a regular customer of the old man.—Then Griffo told him how, long years ago, the persuasions of his friends had induced him to marry, and how, in a year's time, his young wife died, leaving him a daughter, whom the tender care of a prudent aunt had reared. "I have had riches," he added, "that in my flutterers and idlers, attracted by her beauty, seek to ensnare the girl; so that it is doubly necessary that she be suitably employed that evil may not take root in the soil of her heart."

The next morning, in compliance with Griffo's request, Filippo was on the spot at the appointed hour, as followed him with no little curiosity, into the upper apartment of his lodgings.

What shall describe his astonishment, when, from a side door entered the long sought, unknown object of his love. Forgetting all else, he threw himself at her feet, seizing her hand and covered it with kisses, which she very graciously received believing the approbation and consent of her father had been gained.

But it was far otherwise. While the young pair abandoned themselves to joy and delight, the old man foamed with anger and rage, and a storm of imprecations soon convinced the lovers of the true state of the case.

All seemed lost. Griffo seized the girl and led her into the adjoining room, and was about to turn Filippo out of the door, when suddenly the remembrance came to him, how, on a former occasion he had, by the mysterious magic of music, subdued and conquered the terrible anger of the old chest. He quickly seated himself at the open piano, and if before he had been singing in jest, this time he sang with the earnestness of desperation, and not in vain.

Opinions strung from the inner his Edyfier, and became his co-worker. No sooner of song, since Filippo Palma has ever been from a miser gold, for love Elisetta.

GREAT BATTLES.

That the four year's war through which the American people have just passed, will take its place in history as one of the most terrible of modern times; that it developed immense energies and discoveries on the part of both North and South; and that it has converted what was before a purely commercial and agricultural people, into one of the first military powers of the world, taking rank almost with Great Britain and France, are facts which it would be folly to dispute. But the greatness of the conflict—terrible enough in its simple truthful details, has led some of our neighbors to exaggerate it into the most gigantic fight of ancient or modern times.

A letter in the Hastings Chronicle alludes to this fact, and compares the recent civil war in America with some of the most gigantic battles the world ever saw, in ancient or modern times. The greatness of a conflict, it should be remembered, does not consist alone in the number of men engaged, but in the importance of the object to be obtained, in the greatness power and resources of the nations involved in the dispute, in the tenacity with which they adhere to the conflict and by the amount of destruction:

"When considering great wars and armies we can never omit the mighty force which Xerxes brought into Greece, a force which took seven days and nights to cross from Asia into Europe on a bridge of boats. The army is very minutely described by Herodotus, and when numbered after the rout, showed 1,700,000 men, with 80,000 cavalry, to say nothing of the naval force of 1,200 ships. The power on the one side, and the patriotic bravery on the other, exceeds all comparisons.

As to the civil wars of Rome, and the wars by which Rome became the mistress of the world, with the wars of Julius Cæsar (who had stormed a thousand cities, subdued above 300 nations, gained numberless battles of the Germans and Gauls, taken a million of prisoners, and killed as many fairly in the field.")—Plutarch's Life of Pompey.

When the crusaders of all Europe mustered on the plains of Syria under the command of Richard the Lion Hearted, of England, there were soon 100,000 horsemen all clothed in helmets and coats of mail together with their servants and esquires and an infantry force of 600,000 men.—This was a larger army even than the finest army on the planet.

As regards tenacity in war, where is there a greater example than in the Peloponesian war which raged for 27 years between Sparta and Athens which only ended in the destruction of the latter. Then there was the Thirty Years' War in the 17th century between the German Catholic States on the one side, and the Protestant States with Sweden and Denmark on the other side. What is a four years' war compared to this, or to the 20 years' war waged by Great Britain against France and the colossal power of Napoleon. Hecatombs of terrible slaughter in battles and sieges are needed we may point to the war between the Tartars and Chinese, which is at the present moment being waged with terrible fury, or turn back to the battles of the Jews and the seige of Jerusalem as described by Josephus. The present century, however, affords instances of bloody battles and decisive battles, such as was never seen upon the continent. The Battle of Austerlitz was gained by sixty-five thousand French over ninety thousand Austrians and Russians, the victors losing seventeen thousand in killed and wounded, while the enemy lost fifteen thousand on the field and twenty thousand prisoners. At the battle of Friedland, the Russian force was seventy-five thousand strong, while the French mustered about eighty thousand, the former losing twenty-five thousand and the latter eight thousand. At the battle of Wagram, the Austrians lost twenty-four thousand in killed and wounded and twelve thousand prisoners out of an army of one hundred and sixty thousand men. At the battle of Borodino two hundred and eighty thousand men were engaged, and as the sun went down, the bodies of ninety thousand dead and dying men strewed the battle field.—The battle of Waterloo was in some respects the most gigantic of modern times. The two most consummate Generals of the age met upon the historic field to measure their strength. In point of number it was not so gigantic. The French force consisted of eighty thousand men, while the Duke of Wellington had under his command fifty-five British troops and about twenty thousand Germans. Most of the latter ran away. The carnage was fearful.—Nearly one third of the British army fell on the field; but the route of the French army was complete, as an army it ceased to exist, and the battle ended the war.—Nearly forty thousand Frenchmen were killed, wounded and captured.

"PUNCH'S" LATEST.—The cartoon in the latest number of Punch we have received, has special reference to the Fenians and Canada. Seated on a stool at the rear of a fire-engine named "Union," is President Johnston, accoutred as a fireman, helmet, axe, long boots, and all the other paraphernalia of the force, looking sad, but severe, and certainly intending to be honest. In front of him, and pointing with her left hand to something looming in the distance stands a fair and comely maid, wearing the dainty fur hat, a tremendous water-fall fur boots fitting to a dot the exquisite ankle, with looped-up dress and embroidered petticoat. With face half turned to "the Yankee fireman," the following conversation takes place:—"Canada—They say there's fire at Head Centre house. If it spreads to my premises——" "Fireman Johnson—Guess it's only smoke, Miss. Wait till it bursts out."

A youth who had returned from the city was asked by his cautious father if he had been guarded in the contest while there. Oh, yes. I was guarded by two policemen part of the time, was the reply.

How a Fast Young Man fell in Love with a Boy dressed as a Woman.

From the St. Paul Press.

Love is blind, that is certain. Love at first sight, a sudden disarrangement of the nobler corners, that course around the heart of the human anatomy, which has been doubted by frigid theorists, is a fact for the present beyond question. To the proof. At the theatre on Monday evening Miss Jenny Day made her first appearance upon the St. Paul stage. She was beautiful, graceful, charming, and made a profound sensation and a the velvet seats of a number of amorous young men. After the theatrical performances came the ball, and hardly had the curtain dropped, before the adolescent son of a wealthy citizen (of whose numerous triumphs over "the fair," and of whose reputation as a lady-killer, he is himself most justly proud), presented himself before the fascinating Jenny, and begged so eloquently for her hand in the first dance that Jenny hadn't the heart to refuse. At the end of the first dance the enraptured Lothario appealed for her delightful companionship through the second dance, then through the third, and so on to the close of the festive occasion. The blandishments of the young man, lawlessness words, the electric pressure of his fervent palm, all combined to open the door of Jenny's gushing heart, and he revelled in bliss. He monopolized all the attention of the delicate creature, fondly pressed her fairy waist as he whirled her passionately through the mid ite mazes of the waltz; gave her a sweeter, stronger embrace which was reciprocated by the dear exotic soul rent as her parched cheek languishingly upon his palpitating bosom, as they floated through the witching movements of the Schottische. In fact, the young man stuck to Jenny with a tenacity and success that was the envy of 100 bachelors, and he considered himself the most fortunate of mortals. At the close of the entertainment his joy was to be crowned by being permitted to escort the ravishing Jenny to private bowers where she usually took her hash. He waited impatiently for her appearance from the dressing room, that he might once more snatch her wildly to his heaving heart. She came! But—

"Accursed be the tongue that tells me so"

That fairy-like creature whose smile entranced, whose voice made music in his inmost soul, whose embrace stirred his fibres from his top-knot to his toe nails, turned out to be a boy!—and belonged to De Haven's circus at that.

Curious Scene in Rome—Burning "Heretic" Books.

Strangers being numerous in Rome, on account of the Holy Week, an attempt has been made to afford them some amusement. On Sunday week an enormous pile, surrounded by a large quantity of faggots, and guarded by eight gendarmes, was erected in the Piazza San Carlo, before the church of that name, one the missionaries advanced, and from the top of a platform, announced to the crowd that his crusade against wicked books had met with unexpected success. The unfortunate persons, deceived and seduced by the writings of Renan, Proudhon, etc., have lent not to bring them to their confessors, and it had been resolved to burn the whole publicly. At this moment the door of the church opened, and, amid the noise of bells and the clouds of the monks and penitents, the pile was lighted. The missionary seized a book and threw it into the flames with a triumphant air. It was the Vie de Jesus. Volume succeeded volume. Some hundreds of romances were seen no more than empty smoke, in the middle of which from time to time, some jets of turpentine thrown in, flared up to render the flame more brilliant. Some Bengal lights would have been better, but it appears that they had been rejected as involving too great an expense.—Par a Siecle.

The Princess Mary's Future Husband

Another royal marriage is announced—that of Her Royal Highness the Princess Mary Adelaide of Cambridge with the Prince of Teck. It would seem that to this, as in the case of Her Royal Highness the Princess Helena, fortune has smiled upon a Prince whose birth is not altogether royal. Prince Christian, of Schleswig-Holstein, is, as is well known, the son of the Duke of Augustenburg, by his marriage with the Countess Danneskiold Somsoe, a Danish lady of noble but not of royal birth. The marriage, however, being fully recognized by the laws of Denmark, the issue of it have always borne the title of Princes and Princesses of Augustenburg. The Prince of Teck, who is fortunate enough to have secured the hand of our Princess Mary of Cambridge, is the son of Duke Alexander of Wurtemburg by his marriage with a German lady, the Countess Hohenstein. By the German law this marriage was only recognized as a morganatic one, and consequently, as we learn from the Almanach de Gotha, the issue, consisting of one son and two daughters, have only borne the title of Count and Countess of Hohenstein; until December 1, 1863, when a royal decree of the King of Wurtemburg conferred upon them the titles of Prince and Princesses of Teck. The Prince of Teck was born in 1837.

GOOD REASONS.—A Western editor thus apologizes for the non-appearance of his paper at the usual time, "Owing to the fact that our paper-maker disappointed us, that the roads failed and deprived us of our exchanges, that a Dutch peddler stole one scissors, that the rats ran off with the paste, and our devil went to the circus; while the editor was at home tending to the babies, our paper is unavoidably delayed beyond the proper period of publication."

At an infant school examination lately when the question was asked, 'Why did the children of Israel make a golden calf?' a sharp little fellow replied, 'Because they hadn't gold enough to make a bull.'

THURSDAY, MAY 17, 1866.

THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

At present there is but little to interest or amuse the general readers. Parliament having not yet assembled, and the Fenian bubble having burst, in our own coasts there is nought but peace and good will and nothing likely to disturb us before a general election, the time for which we cannot name. In the Lower Provinces the struggle still goes for confederation, and will no doubt eventually prove successful. At present there is a strong party in New Brunswick against confederation. Nova Scotia and Newfoundland appear more favorable to the project.

The United States are still rampant on the protective policy and continue to add new tariffs, the latest being a duty of 20 per cent on horses and cattle from Canada; this was at first declared to have come into force on the 4th, but ten days were granted to allow American speculators to get anything purchased and in Canada, over.

The West Indies are still in trouble especially Cuba, where there are signs of a revolution. Jamaica troubles are settled and the commissioners have returned home. The report has not yet been given.

Spain and Chili are not on amicable terms, as will be seen by the bombardment of Valparaiso, and the central countries of South America are warring against each other.

In Europe matters are as yet quiet, but war looms in the distance. Austria, Prussia and Italy are preparing, what the end may be few yet know. France and Great Britain are comparatively quiet; and reform is going forward in Britain in the case of the new Reform Bill, and in the prospect of other much called for reform of abuses. Although much has already been done, much remains to be done for the advancement of civilization and of the social condition of millions of the human race, even in civilized countries.

THE COMING SESSION.

The Ottawa Evening Post, in remarks on the speculations concerning the business that necessitates the assembling of Parliament at this season of the year, says:—"No one had authority to say that Parliament was called to pass measures specially rising out of our changed relations with the United States. Nor is such the fact." It also says, on what appears good authority, as it is very positive, "that the meeting of the Legislature before the expiration of the fiscal year is to vote supplies before all that has been voted is spent." It further remarks "that no new commercial relations are contemplated for the present, and as for those who are afraid that the country will have to pay for two sessions instead of one, they may calm their fears since only one session is needed to bring the present Parliament to a close." We may presume, therefore, if the Post be correct, which we see no reason to doubt, that the approaching session is the last one of this Parliament. Circumstances, however, might arise that would necessitate another session, even this year, and we might have to pay for two sessions.

STEPHENS.

Head Centre Stephens, for whose head so much has been offered by the British government, has arrived at New York. Large numbers of Fenians have waited upon him, to whom he invariably says he has come by special invitation to effect a reconciliation of the contending parties in America. President O'Mahony has resigned his position, and Stephens has accepted it, but not the title, as Stephens assumes the title, Organiser. Head Centre Stephens professes to be against the invasion of Canada, and condemns the Campo Bello movement. Killian, the Treasurer, has also been removed. In conversation Stephens declares his mission, and confidently asserts that the Irish army will fight upon their own soil ere the expiration of this year. Arrangements have been made to have a great mass meeting in Jones' woods, the particulars of which have not yet come to hand; but the great topic will be money, as they have men enough.

Great efforts are being made to effect a reconciliation between the O'Mahonyites and the Sweeneyites, but not with the success that might be expected from patriots who were willing to forego every personal or other grievance for the common cause of their oppressed (?) country. The Times still pretends to give information of their doings, but the Herald now discountenances their proceedings, and says the only effect of Stephens's arrival will be contributions from the hard working chambermaids and working men. The Herald also brands as folly the hope of doing anything in Ireland, and says to attack the Provinces would be filli bustering, which the United States government could not permit. The American people begin to feel their position since they have been called upon to bear the expense of sending a few regiments to the frontier, a cost which they have no right to be the cause of under any circumstances. Now that the dollar and cent view of the matter begins to affect them, we may hear of a stop being put to the whole Fenian fiasco.

Dummer and Belmont.

Rev. J. S. Douglas, will (D.V.) preach at these places on Sabbath first, at 10½ a.m. and 3½ p.m.

PRESENTATION.

In our last issue we referred to the presentation of a Bible to Wm. Glover, Esq., by the people of Ashburnham, as a token of their good will and appreciation of his labours in various ways in the village, for the moral well-being of both old and young.—Owing to the presentation being made on the evening we went to press we could no more than mention the circumstance. Col. Haultain and a number of the citizens of the village met in the Town Hall, where the Colonel, after some very appropriate and touching remarks, the first of which we regret we did not hear, presented a neatly bound volume of the Bible to Mr. Glover, as the gift of the people of the village. Mr. Glover made an extempore reply, in which he thanked the people for the unexpected token of their good will towards him, expressing the hope that the book which they had presented to him would be the rule of their lives, and the means of pointing them to the great Sacrifice therein set forth—to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world.

Mr. Stratton being called upon, remarked that, being so unexpectedly called upon, he hardly knew what to say. He, however, could bear testimony to the labours and zeal of Mr. Glover in every word and work. Mr. Glover had taken charge of the Sabbath School when there was no one else to do it, and had laboured in that sphere for four years. He also stepped in when others gave up the Sabbath evening meetings, and laboured in that good work; and when cottage prayer meetings were commenced he had done much for them also, so that few deserved better at their hands than did Mr. Glover, and he joined heartily in this tribute to Mr. Glover.

On Thursday evening the people in the neighborhood of Auburn Mills also presented Mr. Glover with an excellent and costly family Bible. The presentation in this case took place at the residence of A. C. Dunlop, Esq., whose kind lady had invited Mr. Glover and other friends to spend the evening. On this occasion Mr. Sherlock, of the Auburn Mills, was the spokes-man, and, we learn, ably discharged the duty. Mr. Glover, who also had kept Sabbath services in this neighborhood, made a suitable reply. It must be gratifying to him on his leaving Peterborough for a while to thus know that his labours have been so well received, and such tangible tokens of respect manifested.

Volunteers—Annual Inspection.

Captain Poole's Rifle Company and the Infantry Companies of Captains Rogers and Kennedy were ye-terday inspected by Col. Durie, Assist. Deputy Adjt. General, and Brig. Major Patterson. During the marchings and countermarchings, and after the review Col. Durie complimented the Captains on the very efficient state of the companies, and their advancement in their exercise, remarking that they were a credit to the force to which they belonged, and that it was a credit also to belong to that force. We are informed that he praised the soldier-like bearing of all the men and the Rifle Company not the least for their spirit in providing targets at their own expense. Col. Durie also enquired into the kind of their drill sheds and armouries, and wondered that there was none, properly so called. On being informed by Captain Poole that the Town and County had promised $1000 if the government would grant a like sum, the Col. remarked that they ought to bring the matter formally before the government and that he, Col. Durie, would do all in his power to urge the government to assist, and that he would do all he could to bring any matter before the government or the Adjutant General. It is encouraging to our Volunteers to know that they are not neglected by every one. If the citizens of Peterboro' cannot afford to acknowledge their services and readiness to defend their country and homes, the government will.

Physiogs.

A meeting, the last but one, will be held in the Firemen's Hall, on Friday evening, (tomorrow) at eight o'clock, for the purpose of fitting up the different companies and receiving the various reports. Any person wishing to join will distinctly understand that unless he identifies himself with some company, gives his name to the Secretary, and pays for his mask, 12½ cents, he cannot join the procession. At another meeting tickets will be issued to members, without one of which no person will be admitted to the dressing and starting place.

MASKS.—The individuals who took from the Firemen's Hall a number of masks, the majority of which were black, are requested to return them immediately to the Secretary of the Physiogs, at Graham & Stanton's book store, otherwise steps will be taken for their return.

New Bank.

The Royal Canadian Bank is now open for business. Office opposite Caisse's Hotel. This Bank is under the management of Mr. Ogilvy, who has long been one of our citizens and well known to the whole community.—A large amount of stock has also been taken by moneyed and capitalists of the place, and who will, no doubt, take a lively interest in the institution. We may, therefore, expect that the Royal Canadian will be one of our own institutions. At present we have a branch of the Bank of Montreal, one of the Bank of Toronto, one of the Commercial Bank and also this branch of the Royal Canadian Bank; and by the first of June we expect to have a branch of the Ontario Bank. If dollar bills be scarce then it will not be because we have no bank here, but because we will have no credit.

Fall Wheat.

In passing through Enniemore and Smith a few days since we find that the Fall Wheat has almost wholly been destroyed. Some that we were speaking to assured us that they had ploughed up 40 acres, and put in other crops. In fact, only the most perfectly sheltered spots have escaped, and the same may be reported of the front part of the County, according to accounts from the farmers themselves. The new settlements have escaped and crops there look well.

Literary Club.

We are requested to state that a Conversazione will be given on the 7th of June next, by the members of the Peterborough Litery Club, for the benefit of the Library fund. Also, that there will be a debate this evening, when members of the Club only will be admitted. Subject:—"Is Canada in at present situated, would we be better by electing our Governor."

The bonfire of last anticipates a superb bonfire of it here on the Queen's birthday. Every effort is being made to provide amusement for those who delight in it, and we have no doubt but that they will be successful.

A Murderer Kills Himself.

George Peet, a resident of Cayuga County, N. Y. State, lately poisoned his wife, and fled to Canada with a paramour. Peet was taken in Canada and afterwards was given up to the U. S. authorities. On his way back in the cars, near Canandaigua, he asked permission from the constables to go into the watercloset of the car and while there cut his throat with a razor, which, it is supposed, had been furnished him by the individual who had been the means of estranging him from his lawful wife. Peet had been a hotel proprietor at Owasco Lake.

New Hotel in Rochester.

Mr. J. W. Hamilton has removed to the premises third door south of the R. R. Depot. We would recommend any of our Canadian friends visiting Rochester to call at the Hamilton House where they will find an accommodating landlord and a comfortable home to put up at. The following we clip from the Rochester Democrat:—"Mr. J. W. Hamilton, recently of the Western Hotel, Mill Street, has just fitted up and opened a new House at No. 13 Mill Street, opposite his old place, which has been named after himself. It is neatly appointed, and furnished from cellar to roof, in an acceptable manner. All the accommodations are excellent—a good table, good rooms and good beds, and Hamilton, himself, is a genial and accommodating host."

Bombardment of Valparaiso.

Considerable discussion has lately taken place concerning the bombardment of Valparaiso, the commercial centre of Chili, by the Spanish Admiral, Casto Mendes Nunes; and much blame was attached to the British Admiral Denman for not interfering and preventing the destruction of property that ensued, and which belonged principally to foreigners. A certain Commodore Rogers, of the U. S. navy, was also in the neighborhood, and afterwards sought to lay the blame of the whole on the trepidation of the British Admiral, who feared to encounter a Spanish iron-clad mounting 40 heavy guns, while he declared he could sink her in 30 minutes with Monitor Monadnock, mounting only 4 guns; but Admiral Denman at the 11th hour backed out. On reading the report of Commodore Rogers the Britisher was rather severely censured for his want of pluck; but the report of the Spanish Admiral sets matters in a very different light.—That report says:—

On the 29th March I received the visit of Admiral Denman, who told me that he had been informed by the American Commodore of my interviews with the United States Minister (General Kilpatrick) that the laws of war did not authorize the destruction of defenceless cities [illegible] exclusively by foreigners, that it would be impossible for him to be a passive spectator of such a deed, that he would have to adopt measures the extent of which he could not then define, and that he begged me not to commence operations until the arrival of the mail from Europe." * * * * * On the same day, the 29th, I was once more visited by the American Commodore, accompanied by the Secretary of Legation, with the apparent purpose of bringing a reply to my communication. On doing so, he said that he had intended to oppose the bombardment of Valparaiso by force; because he was at the time convinced that Chili was in the right; but that subsequently he had arrived at the conclusion that right, moderation and dignity, were on the side of Spain; wherefore, he not only should not oppose anything, but that his ships would move out of the way at 8 o'clock on the 31st ult. It will be seen that Rogers first announced withdrawal from the arrangement to prevent the bombardment. The Spanish commander narrates the circumstances attending certain propositions for an amicable settlement of the difficulties between Spain and Chili, made by Rogers. The report says:—"He (Rogers) proposed a plan of arrangement, which he considered equally honorable for both belligerents. In accordance with this plan, there should have been a cessation of hostilities; my credentials presented, and a new investigation made of the different grievances against Chili. As an earnest of peace, there should first be a reciprocal salute of twenty guns, in the following manner: the flags of Spain and Chili, hoisted at the mast-heads of the English and American flag ships, should be saluted by the guns of the two squadrons; and in this salute a Chilian fort and the Spanish squadron should join in such manner that, with the noise and the smoke, it should never be known by whom the first gun had been fired."

These offers were rejected, and the Commodore withdrew from the scene without intertering, although he says he could have sunk the Spanish iron-clad in 30 minutes; but he, according to report sneaked away.

Thus the braggadaun of the American Commodore is fully exposed and the onus thrown on him instead of on the British Admiral, as was at first reported.

The British Admiral, however, did nothing, as he, awaiting order from his government and chose to look on rather than embroil Spain and Britain in trouble, and perhaps expense.

Woman's Rights.

A convention has lately been held in New York, to set forth the many grievances of the fair sex, and their right to vote, to engage in various employments now only carried on by the sterner sex, and in fine, to elevate woman and society thereby, if possible.—The desideratum, however, is the right to vote. Henry Ward Beecher was present.—The chairwoman, a Mrs. Stanton, said;—

She would have women associated together with men, on equal wages, as inspectors of streets, of prisons, of metropolitan police, commissioned, uniformed, and paid by the St te to guard and watch the youth of the nation; with a star on her brow and a sceptre in her hand. Would not women patrol our streets at the midnight hour with holier mission than she now does—a dependent on the will and bounty of another? Give a man the right over my subsistence, he has a right over my whole moral being. I would have organized companies of women to stem drunkenness, gambling, licentiousness; to watch and guard the youth, the weak, and ignorant; to counsel the criminal and fortunate; to look after the order and cleanliness of tenement-houses, streets, and prisons, thus making the mother and wife and sister and daughter a power over this moral realm, and be no longer slave where she should be ruled; no longer subject where she should be Queen. In the narrow sphere now assigned women, under a dynasty of force, she perished for want of labor and thought. Shall they who lounge velvet cushions, clothed in purple and fine linen, faring sumptuously every day, tell us they do not care to vote? Have you no duties to the sad, fallen, and outraged of your own sex? (Here a very stout woman in a front pew began to look agonized in the countenance, and at the end of every measured sentence that fell from Mrs Stanton, she uttered the word "Amen," while two or three other old women put their handkerchiefs to their eyes, and some young women laughed audibly. But still the first old lady clasped her hands and nodded her head, and said "Amen.")

Mrs. Stanton continued by saying that women should be conductors on cars and railroad, drivers of carriages and stages, and now no shopping go to. If every ladies can drive two horses in Fifth Avenue, in the park, with a man on the back seat for ornament. (Laughter.) Why may not the less fortunate women earn two dollars a day as drivers on the cars and stages? There would be less cursing to the horses, less swearing and swearing in our streets. Women's influence in all departments would introduce more elements of brightness and beauty.

SIGNS OF WAR IN EUROPE.

For some time the signs of the times in Europe appear significant. Late news is rather conflicting. At one time we hear the great parties, Austria and Prussia, are disarming and returning to a peace status.—Latest accounts state that Austria and Italy are getting into trouble, and that Victor Emmanuel has his army on a war footing. The following is given as the strength of Austria and Prussia. We have not seen the strength of Italy but many suppose Napoleon is with Italy against Austria.

The Germanic Confederation comprises thirty-four sovereignties—one empire, five kingdoms, seven grand duchies, seven duchies, one electorate, one landgravate, eight principalities and four free cities. The total population is forty five million.

The leading powers maintain large standing armies and supply from these their quotas for the army of the confederation. The smaller powers, however, raise no troops besides what they are required to furnish to the national army.

The Austrian army is commanded by three field marshals, thirteen generals, seventy-eight lieutenant field marshals, and one hundred and twenty one major generals, making a total of two hundred and fifteen general officers. In July, 1865, the strength of the rank and file was as follows:

	Peace footing.	War foot ng.
Guards	785	785
Infantry of the line	185,906	385,724
Infantry of the frontiers	50,401	53,268
Infantry, light	24,710	48,845
In antry, sanitary troops	1,010	2 342
Cavalry	88,168	41,903
Artillery	28,171	50,489
Engineers	9,764	13,768
Military train	2,928	22,272
Gendarmerie and military police	13,432	13,432
Total	394,213	632,447

In time of actual war this number is considerably increased by various regiments of sharp shooters, militia and volunteers that are called into service.

The Prussian army has two field marshals, thirty-five generals, fifty-eight lieutenant generals and ninety-seven major generals—total, one hundred and ninety-two. The rank and file number as follows:

	Peace footing.	War footing.
Infantry of the guard	17,035	27,451
Infantry of the line	116,136	218,988
Infantry, chasseurs, and sharpshooters	5,340	10,008
Cavalry of the guard	4,764	6,857
Cavalry of the line	24,944	25,432
Cavalry of the landwehr	204	7,272
Artillery	15,851	28,091
Pioneers	4,755	5,454
Military train	1,647	20,200
Troops in depots	....	123,928
Troops in garrisons	9,588	152,797
Total rank and file	199,963	639,625
Officers, about	8,000	10,000
Gendarmerie	3,200	2,250
School of sub. officers	980	980
Corps of guides (feldjagers)	77	77
Invalids	1,551	....
Total	214,691	654,002
Second levy of the landwehr		95,496
Total		748,498

The artillery comprise 126 batteries, with 804 guns in time of peace, and 156 batteries with 864 guns, in time of war.

There is an annual levy made of 64,000 men, and the time of service in the line and landwehr is in all nineteen years.

The quotas of the larger sovereignties to the national army are as follows: Austria, 173,841; Prussia, 147,170; Bavaria, 65,268; Saxony, 22,000; Hanover, 25,393; Wurtemburg, 25,585; Baden, 18,536. The aggregate quota of the smaller states is 76,476; which makes a grand total of 553,048. This includ s all arms of service. Only Austria and Prussia have naval forces. The Austrian navy consists of 61 steamers, carrying an aggregate of 716 guns, and 51 sailing vessels armed with 344 guns. Five of its steam frigates are ironclads. Prussia has 2 ironclads and 35 other steamers, carrying 252 guns; 8 sailing vessels carrying 140 guns; and 40 rowing vessels, armed with 76 guns.—Ex.

Debt of Great Britain.

In about one year from this time the annual cost of the public debt of Great Britain will be lightened by more than half a million sterling. This is in consequence of the approaching termination of the annuity of £585,740 contracted in 1823, to be paid to the Bank of England for forty-four years, the last half-yearly portion of which will fall due in April, 1867. The expiring of the annuity, commonly known as the "Dead Weight," will not in any way affect the accounts of the bank, the requisite reserves having always been made to reinstate the principal amount.

First Annual Report of the Peterboro Literary Club.

In presenting the first annual report, the officers have the gratification of laying before the members a statement of the affairs of the Club for the last year.

One year ago the institution was organized, under circumstances not the most favorable, there being only seven gentlemen present. Since then, however, the expectations of those persons have been fully realized, as its members now number 61 paying subscribers.

According to the constitution, the members of the Fire Brigade were made honorary members of the Club, as an equivalent for the use of the Firemen's Hall and furniture, which are placed at the disposal of the Club for use at their meetings.

The officers of the Club have had to contend with the usual difficulties attending all new organizations; they have found that the constitution and by-laws under which they have operated for the past year require to be altered and amended; at the last meeting a committee was appointed for that purpose, and it is hoped that they will be so arranged as to meet the requirements and overcome the difficulties laboured under heretofore.

Institutions of this nature have been the means of a great deal of benefit to young men; many persons have become good public speakers whose talents would for ever have been undeveloped but for the assistance of debating clubs and schools of this nature. A splendid opportunity is now presented to young men, and others, to develope latent talent, by attending and taking part in debates and readings.

It is hoped every young man at least in the vicinity will become a member of the Club, so that an institution presenting such advantages to the young will be supported and maintained, and that the trouble and labour of organizing and supporting for the past year will not be in vain.

On the 4th of January last, a conversazione was given for the purpose of raising money to pay off a debt on the library formerly owned by the old Mechanics' Institute of this town. The amount raised fully reached our expectations and enabled us to obtain the library for the use of the Club.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

TOWN COUNCIL.

Monday, May 14th, 1866.

The Council met. Present—His Worship the Mayor and Messrs. Ewing, Cox, Toole, Stevenson, Ormond, Hamilton, Doherty and Wrighton.

The minutes of the last three meetings were read and confirmed.

A Communication from Mrs. Haultain, Secretary of the Protestant Home, was received, conveying the thanks of the Committee of the Home for the prompt and liberal manner in which the Council had responded to their appeal for aid.

A Petition was received from John Hillier, asking for a bridge across the creek on Edinburgh street was read and referred to the Committee on streets and bridges.

An Account from Leon Carse for meals furnished to the Lakefield Volunteers amounting to $17.13, was referred to the Committee on finance.

An Account from Jas. Chatha.. for repairing the side walk on McDonald street was ordered to be paid on motion of Mr. Toole, seconded by Mr. Wilson.

The Chairman of the Committee on finance and assessment read the following report:—

Your Committe on finance and assessment beg to recommend the following accounts to be paid:—Mr. Thomas Chambers' account for bread, $22.44; Mr. John Marsha repairing hose, $8.00. All of which is respectfully submitted.

CHAS. ORMOND,
Chairman.

The report was received and adopted.

On motion of Mr. Ormond, seconded by Mr. Ewing, the Council went into Committee of the whole on the second reading of the By-law for fixing the price to be paid for an Auctioneer's license, Mr. Hamilton in the chair.

The By-law was read, the Committee rose, the chair man reported the By-law read a second time without amendment.

On motion of Mr. Millar, seconded by Mr. Ewing, the By-law was read a third time and passed; and the Mayor and Clerk authorized to sign the same and affix the seal thereto.

On motion of Mr. Stevenson, seconded by Mr. Ormond, a By-law for appointing a collector of rates and assessments for the present year was read a first time.

On motion of Mr. Toole, seconded by Mr. Wilson, the whole Council was appointed a committee to sell tickets for the excursion to Cobourg on the Queen's birthday.

The Council adjourned for two weeks.

SMITH COUNCIL.

Smith, May 10th, 1866.

The members of the Council met as a Court of Revision on the Assessment Roll.

APPEALS.

From William Telford, complaining of an overcharge on his Assessment on the N. ½ of Lot No. 9, East of the Communication Road. Reduced $100.

From Joseph Nelson, who considered himself assessed too high on part of Lot No. 27 in the 7th concession. Reduced $80.

From William Snyder, stating that he was not the owner of Glenmorrison Mills and other property. Mr. Snyder could not say who was the owner, but his right has been disposed of, consequently he was assessed for the house he resides in, and the remainder entered on the non-resident Roll.

A considerable number of young men have been assessed as joint owners and occupiers with their fathers; the Clerk was directed to request them to give information on the matter at the adjourned Court of Revision to be held on the 31st inst.

The members then went into Council for the discharge of public business.

PETITIONS.

From Mrs. Moore, stating that she had no means of supporting herself and four small children but her own labor, and prayed for assistance from the Council. The Reeve was directed to issue his order on the Treasurer in her favor for $10.

From Samuel Hatton and others, praying that the Road between Lots 30 and 31 be opened up through the 10th, 11th, and 12th concession, for the travel and use of the public. Petition laid over.

The quarterly report of the Inspector was read and adopted.

The following By-laws received their first, second and third readings and were passed:

A By-law to establish a Road between Lots 28 and 29 through the 11th concession.

A By-law to close up and dispose of the Road leading from the 9th concession line to the Mud Lake line of Road between Lots 15 and 16 in the 9th concession.

The Clerk was directed to notify William Moffat to remove his fence off Gore Street, opposite Lot No. 58, in the village of Bridgenorth; also Mrs. McCormick to remove her fence off Hunter Street, opposite Lot No. 51 in said village.

Michael Galvin stated that he had received notice from the Assessor that the taxes levied on broken Lot No. 3 in the 5th concession, for 1861, remained unpaid, and that the Collector had neglected his duties as sufficient property was on the premises at the time of his collection to have distrained for the same. Clerk directed not to enter the same on the Collector's Roll for the present year.

MONAGHAN TOWNSHIP COUNCIL.

Monaghan, May 5th, 1866.

The members of the Council met as a Court of Revision on the Assessment Roll. The Reeve in the chair.

APPEALS.

From John Tully regarding the extension of the frauchise, unequal assessments, and militia enrolment not taken. Not entertained, as Mr. Tully failed to give the names of the parties to the Clerk that they might have been cited to attend the Court. He then notified the Council that he intended to appeal to His Honor Judge Boucher, respecting their extending the franchise to several parties, thus placing them on the Assessment Roll in direct contradiction to the statute.

From Luke Barry, who considered himself assessed too high. Reduced $200.

Mr. Cottles charged Thomas Leonard with making a false statement to the Assessor, and requested that the Clerk would have him summoned to appear at the adjourned Court of Revision, to be held on the 19th inst., to answer the charge preferred against him.

The Council met afterwards for the discharge of public business.

Minutes of last meeting read and confirmed.

PETITIONS.

From John Whitfield and others asking assistance to open up concession line between the 9th and 10th concession, eastward from the 9th to the eighth lot. Mr. Whitfield, himself, promising to add one half the sum allowed by the Council. Granted $10.

From John W. Campbell and others stating the dangerous state of the bridge over Fenn's creek, being altogether unsafe for general traffic, and that an accident might at any time occur involving expense many times more than that would now be sufficient to make the needful repairs. A desultory discussion ensued, during which several members expressed themselves to the effect that as the road was subject to heavy freshets, especially during the spring thaw, a good substantial bridge should be built, and, on the motion of Mr. Collins, seconded by Mr Gandfellow, Councillors Dundass and Robson were appointed a Committee to examine and report at the next meeting of the Council.

The account of A. H McDougal, Esq., P.L.S., for survey and description of road through lot 11 to the 13th con., amounting to $5, was received and an order given on the Treasurer for the same.

The account of the President of the Protestant Home for 11 weeks' board of Nancy Bell at 10s. per week, and clothing purchased amounting to 19s. 4d., making together the sum of £5 9s. 4d. An order was given on the Treasurer.

Orders were also given in favor of Mrs. Walsh, for 50 cents, taxes overpaid, and to John H. Campbell for $30, being the amount of salary for services as Assessor for present year.

On the motion of Mr. Collins, seconded by Mr Dundass, the Council adjourned to Saturday, the 19th instant, at the hour of one o'clock, p. m.—Com.

To the Editor of the Peterborough Examiner.

SIR.—As the owner of the steamer Rochester, and thinking the public are not fully aware of all the particulars which have resulted in the present ungenerous opposition on the part of the owner of the Corinthian, I beg to trespass on your columns as briefly as a narrative of the facts will allow.

The Maple Leaf having been sold to the American Government during the summer of 1864 and the route between the North Shore ports and Rochester not being occupied for a whole season, Mr Gildersleeve was solicited, both by the people of Port Hope and Cobourg, to place the Empress on the route to fill the vacuum in steamboat accommodation; but he declined, and the necessity for a boat becoming daily more pressing, I purchased the Rochester in the summer of 1865 and commenced running on the 4th of July. She was the only boat available for the purpose at the time, and although wanting in the luxurious requisi ents of the present age, was a good staunch sea b at, made regular trips, was not exorbitant in her tariff, and was all that was wanted for the station at that time. Of course in opening a route that has been unused for a season, there are fresh connections to be made, and the travel which has been diverted has to be brought back again. This occupies some time, during which it may be supposed the receipts were not very remunerative. By the time, however, that the Rochester was fairly established on the route, namely, the summer of 1864, I was not a little surprised to find myself opposed by the Empress, a boat for which the owner, Mr Gildersleeve, had no occupation, and as unfit for crossing the lake in bad weather as could be well conceived

The season terminated, and Mr. Gildersleeve proposed to me that inasmuch as both boats had been merely paying expenses during the preceeding season, we should come to some understanding, intimating that he had another and more, formidable opponent to place against the Rochester as soon as she was completed—The war not having terminated, and gold not having gone down, the prospects for 1865 were rather gloomy, and I was induced by Mr Gildersleeve, holding out the prospect that he would withdraw the Empress, and merely wished to occupy the route with the Corinthian for the season, and that afterwards she would in all probability be taken into the mail line, to enter into the following arrangements with him:

The Empress was to be withdrawn, and I was to run the Rochester till the Corinthian could be got ready, which proved to be 13 weeks, deducting out of the profit for my own use £300, and dividing any balance there might be equally with him. His share of the balance amounted to $2040 in greenbacks, and $848 Canada money, which I paid him. I then had to seek a temporary route for the Rochester, looking forward to the close of the season, and the Corinthian being placed on the Mail I was afterwards. The Corinthian, however, had not been running long, before she broke down, and I resumed my place on the route by the consent of Mr. G., on the very liberal condition of my handing him over one third of the profits which amounted to $1868.39 in greenbacks, and $840 in Canada money, which I also paid him. As soon as the Corinthian's repairs were finished, I had again to go off the route by the terms of the agreements During last winter I expended $7000 in a new boiler, upper saloon, in raising the shaft, and other improvements, and I had no sooner commenced running a fortnight ago, than Mr. G. instructed his Captain to enter into no tariff with me, but to do his best to run the Rochester off the route. I believe I am stating the truth when I say that since this season has begun, and until the time the Rochester was ready to run, the Corinthian has taken good advantage of being alone on the route, and made a pretty good harvest by charging nearly double he ordinary fare.—Now I appeal to the past whether I took an unfair advantage of the public before the Empress was placed against my boat. Mr. G. may delude himself into the idea that he can run me off. My intention is to keep the Rochester on the route as long as one plank sticks together, and I appeal to a generous minded public, whether I ought to be sustained against the opposition or not. Fortunately the Rochester's speed is so much increased, that her opponent can only beat her across the lake by half an hour, with her steel plated sides. The accommodation on the Rochester is now all that can be wished for, and comfort and civility will be met with on board. The whole case lies in a nutshell. If the public wish to be civilly treated, and carried across the Lake for a fair remunerative price, they will sustain me, who have been a resident in Cobourg for 24 years; if not, they will encourage an interloper from Kingston, whose only aim is to squeeze all he can out of the public, and who has no interest in the welfare of this section of the country, and who directly he had disposed of the Rochester, would put the Corinthian on the mail line, and place on the North Shore ports and Rochester route some such worn out boat as the Banshee.

I am sir, yours &c.,
G. S. DAINTRY,
Sole owner of the Rochester.

Cholera.

The New York Times publishes the following letter from Captain Peabody, who is said to be an intelligent and reliable person. The remedy he used with such success is always at hand in every family and might be tried where a physician could not be promptly procured. The date of the letter is not given but we believe it refers to some former visitation of the pestilence.

TO DR. TURNER—DEAR SIR:—In compliance with your request I respectfully reply that in January last, in the packet ship Isaac Wright, I sailed from Liverpool with two hundred and five passengers. Within forty-eight hours after sailing, cases of cholera appeared on board, which I treated for some time according to the book, with such bad success that within ten days I had thrown overboard twenty-seven of the passengers dead with the cholera. I then recollected a method of treatment suggested to me by a friend and predecessor, Captain Alex. Marshall, viz: To give a tablespoonful of salt and a teaspoonful of red pepper in half a pint of hot water. I tried it with such success that I did not lose another during the passage, nor since.

The medicine acts very promptly as an emetic, say in one or two minutes. It brings up a very offensive matter, which sticks like glue. It was given, among others, to one old woman of eighty-four years of age, who was on deck, though weak, of course, the next day. I have known it to be successfully used on board their ships by at least a dozen shipmasters besides myself. Its use is quite general in Liverpool where even some of the regular doctors find it to their advantage to resort to it.

Provided with this simple receipt, I no longer consider the cholera an unmanageable disease,

[Signed] G. S. PEABODY,
Master of packet ship Isaac Wright.

An application will be made to the Court of Queen's Bench to grant a writ of Habeas Corpus in the case of the Fenians held in custody at Cornwall.—Globe.

New Road Centre Stephen's Escape from Ireland.

If the object of Mr. Stephens, the "Head Centre," in coming to this was to attract general attention to his person, it has proved a failure. Some years back this would no doubt have been the case. He would probably have been the admired of the fashionable and the heroine. An portrait, or want purpose to be his portrait, appears, indeed, indeed, in the Manor Minstrel, to a few shop windows, or in a dealer of the Boulevards, and his name has been mentioned two or three times in the chronicles of one or two evening papers. But few stop to look at the portrait, and a few read the gossip. The French pronounce the word "Fenian" as they do "Faineant," and appear to attach to both the same meaning. "Faineant" means a lazy good-for-nothing, and no French man is flattered by such a designation. A writer who declared that he spent some hours in his company a few evenings ago "at the house of the idle-trues Academicians, who desired to surpass his guests by the prescence of one who at this moment causes such disquiet to the English Government," thus relates his impressions. He says: "The evening I saw him he was elegantly dressed, observing throughout a modest demeanour; waiting to be addressed before speaking to any one, and answering all question put to him in a simple and natural manner. When asked for details as to his arrest, his imprisonment, and his plans, he said;—"My arrest took place because I wished it. For many hours I knew that the police were on my traces, and it was my pleasure to be arrested in order to prove that I could escape with the greatest ease. While in prison I was treated with the utmost regard. I wanted for nothing and in this respect I cannot too highly praise the English Government. But it was absolutely necessary to depart. I had expressed my desire to do so to a person of whom I was sure, with whom no unexpected circumstance put me in communication and the prison doors, as to speak stood open before me. I don't know whether any one meant to stop me, but around me I saw only accomplices.' 'But once out of prison,' observed a listener, 'how did you manage to leave Ireland?'—'Once out of prison I fled to the country. Money and a revolver were given me. I then heard that a reward of £40,000 was offered for me to bring me back to Dublin, dead or alive. I remained, up to the time of my getting on board ship, in the country, living during the day in a hut, and going out at night to reach another. In every place where I took refuge I was well known. Indeed, I was expected there.—Notwithstanding the large sum offered by the Irish Government for my apprehension, nobody ventured to inform against me; and this single fact proves that Ireland was at my disposal.' 'And now what you plans?' 'I am going to America for an army of 200,000 men, who are expecting me, and I will return with them to deliver Ireland, my country from the British yoke.'"

THE WEST INDIES.—Advices from Havanna are to the 1st inst. The United States steamer Swatara had arrived from Jamaica and reports the cholera in Guadaloupe had decreased to sixty cases per day, and was mostly confined to negroes.

Upwards of a hundred coolies had revolted near Cardenas, Cuba. The arrival of ships laden with them very frequent, and no obstruction was offered to the trade at all.

The amphitheatre for bull fights, at Puerto Principe, fell on the 20th ult., wounding and mutilating many of the spectators.

More rows and duels between natives and Spaniards are recorded. A circular calling upon the native sons of Cuba to take up arms against the power of Spain was seized by the public.

Recent correspondence from Madrid states that Spain is fully prepared for another revolution, which will have for its object a complete change of the royal dynasty.—General Prim is spoken of as engaged in the movement, and a son of Victor Emanuel is named as likely to succeed Queen Isabell on the throne.

Alarming reports had reached Madrid from the United States steamer Keersarge, off Lisbon. It said that seven of her officers had died of African fever, as well as a number of the crew.

The New York Express says that the quantity of grain produced in Canada seems almost fabulous. Last year 25,000,000 bushels of wheat were grown, 12,000,000 bushels of peas, 40,000,000 bushels of oats, 1,700,000 tons of hay, 13,000,000 bushels of buck-wheat 28,000,000 bushels of potatoes, and 10,000,000 bushels of turnips. Canada also produced 30,000,000 lbs. of beef, sheared 5,500,000 lbs. of wool, and made over 459,000,000 lbs. of butter. And do our American neighbors suppose that three or four millions of the British race occupying a country possessed of such great resources are likely to be dependant upon them for existence?

PROVINCIAL REVENUE.—The following is a statement of the revenue and expenditure of the Province of Canada for the month ending 30th April, 1866:—

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The undersigned having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection, and that dread disease Consumption—is anxious to make known to his fellow sufferers the means of cure.

To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used, (free of charge,) with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, &c. The only object of the advertiser in sending the Prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable; and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address

Among the most important of modern Medical discoveries, stands the Canadian Pain Destroyer.

As a Family Medicine, it is well and favorably known, relieving thousands from pain in the Side, Back and Head, Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Sprains, Bruises, Cramps in the Stomach, Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Bowel Complaints, Burns, Scalds, Frost-bites, &c. &c. The Canadian Pain Destroyer has now been before the Public for a length of time, and wherever used is well liked, never failing in a single instance to give permanent relief when timely used, and we have never known a single case of dissatisfaction, where the Directions have been properly followed, but on the contrary all are delighted with its operations, and speak in the highest terms of its Virtues and Magical effects.

We speak from experience in this matter, having tested it, thoroughly, and therefore those who are suffering from any of the complaints for which it is recommended may depend upon its being a Sovereign Remedy.

The astonishing efficacy of the Canadian Pain Destroyer, in curing the diseases for which it is recommended, and its wonderful success in subduing the tortuing pains of Rheumatism, and in relieving Nervous Affections, entitle it to a high rank in the list of remedies for these complaints. Ordersare coming in from Medicine Dealers, in all parts of the Country for further supplies, and each testifying as to the universal satisfaction it gives.

The Canadian Pain destroyer never fails to give immediate relief. All Medicine dealers keep it. Physicians order and use it; and no family will be without it after once trying it. Price only Twenty-five cents per Bottle.

BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY
IN CANADA.

The following testimony from a well known and highly respected Merchant of Prescott, is corroborative of the general approval given to Dr WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY:

Prescott, C. W., Dec. 8th, 1859.

Messrs. S. W. Fowle & Co., Boston.

Gentlemen: -

Being solicited by your Travelling Agent, for an expression of opinion of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, I with pleasure assert that it is, in my belief, the best remedy before the public for coughs and pulmonary complaints.

Having tested the article with myself and family, in case of severe coughs and colds, for years, with uniform and unexceptionable success, I unhesitatingly recommend it, with full confidence in its merits.

Yours truly,
ALFRED HOOKER.

None genuine unless signed, I. Butts, on the wrapper Prepared by Seth W. Fowle & Co., Boston, and for sale by all dealers in medicines.

The Search for John Smith.

John Smith married my father's great uncle's eldest daughter, Melinda Bryne—Of course, then John was a relative.

John's family had often visited at our quiet country home, and at each visit had most cordially pressed us to return the compliment.

Last October business called me suddenly to the city of B——, where our relative resided, and without having time to write to apprise them of my coming, I was intending to visit to the family of Mr. John Smith.

With my accustomed carelessness, I'd left his precise address at home in my note book, but I thought little of it; I could easily find him, I thought to myself, as the cars came down amid the smoke and bustle of B——

I inquired for my relative of the first hackman I came across.

He looked at me with an ill-suppressed grin. What was the fellow laughing at? To be sure my cloths were not of the very latest cut, and it is not just the thing for any one out of the army to wear blue with bright buttons; but my coat was whole, and my aunt Betsey had scoured the buttons with whiting and soft soap until they shone like gold. I repeated my question with great dignity.

'Can you direct me to the residence of Mr. John Smith?'

'Mr. Smith,' he said.

'Yes, sir, Mr. John Smith. He married my father's great uncle's eldest daughter, Melinda,'

'I don't think I know a John Smith with a wife Melinda.'

John Smith seemed to be a common noun with him, from the peculiar tone he used in speaking of that individual.

'All!' remarked I, 'then there is more than one of that name in the city?'

'I rather think there is.'

'Very well, then, direct me to the nearest.'

'The nearest is in West street, second land, left corner—you'll see the name on the door.'

I passed on, congratulating myself on the cordial welcome I should receive from John and Melinda.

I soon reached the place—a handsome house with the name on a silver door plate; I rang the bell—a servant appeared.

'Mr. Smith in?'

'No, sir; Mr. Smith is in the army.'

'Mrs Smith—is she?'

'In the army? oh, no—she's at the sea shore.'

'This is Mr. John Smith's house, is it?'

'It is.'

'Was his wife's name Melinda, and was she a Bryne before she was married, from Squashville?'

The man reddened and responded angrily. 'Make off with yourself. I thought from the first that you was an entry thief, but you don't play no game on me!' And he then banged the door in my face.

Inquiry elicited the fact that a John Smith resided in Arch Street. Thither I bent my steps. A maid servant answered my ring.

'Mr. Smith in?'

Before the girl could reply, a big, red faced man jumped out of the shadows behind the door, and laid his heavy hands on my shoulder.

'Yes, sir,' he cried in a voice of thunder, 'Mr. Smith is in. He stayed at home all day on purpose to catch you, and now you have to take it.'

'Sir,' said I, there must be some mistake. Are you Mr. Smith?'

'I'll inform you about Mr. Smith in a way that you won't relish, if you don't settle damages forthwith. Five thousand dollars is the very lowest figure—and you must now leave the country.'

'Who do you take me for?' cried I, my temper rising.

'It looks well for you to ask that question, you have come to elope with my wife—you needn't blush.

'You must be mistaken, sir.'

'Do you deny that you are William Jones?'

'I am not a Jones—I have not that honor, sir. My name is Parkwell from the town of Squashville. And with a bow I took myself off.'

After that I had at the residence of three John Smith's—none of them was my Mr. John Smith.

Upon making some further inquiry, I was informed of another Smith some distance off, and on my arrival at the house, rang the bell.

Well, of all the impudent rascals that ever I saw you beat the lot! I want to know if you had the cheek to come back here again? You'd like to sell me another German silver teapot and another brass bosom pin to dear Amanda!'

'By no means,' said I; 'I beg leave to inform you——'

'Oh, you needn't beg! We don't believe in beggars! I suppose you thought I should not know you—but I did!

'Allow me to inquire,' said I, 'if Mr. John Smith's wife was Melinda Byrne, the eldest daughter of my father's——'

The broomstick was lifted I heard it cut the air like a minie bullet and sprang down the steps into the street.

I called on two more Mr. Smith's—still unsuccessful in my search. It was getting near dark, and I was more than anxious to reach my destination.

My next Mr. Smith was located in Lennox street. It was twilight when I rang the bell at his door.

A smiling fellow admitted me, fairly forcing me into the hall, before I could utter a word.

'Walk right in, sir, they are expecting you! The ladies will be down in a moment. Miss Hattie is in the back parlor Walk right in, sir.'

I was gently pushed toward the door of a shed-like apartment, and at the entrance I was announced:—

'Mr Henry!'

'Oh, Henry—my dearest and best—why don't you kiss me, Henry?' cried a voice like music, 'have you ceased to care for me?'

Who could resist the temptation? I am naturally a diffident man, but I have some human nature in me, and paid her principal and interest.

'I beg your pardon, marm,' said I, the gas having been lit by this time, 'there is a mistake. My Uncle of Mr. Smith's wife was Melinda Bryne, the eldest daughter of my father's great uncle?'

'She was not. You will, I hope excuse me for the blunder! We are expecting my brother Henry from the army, and your blue clothes deceived me.'

'For which I shall always wear blue,' I replied. 'I am Henry Parkwell of Squashville;' and in making my best bow, I stumbled over an ottoman, and fell smash into a china closet, breaking at least a dozen plates and as many glass tumblers.

I sprang to my feet, seized my hat, and without a word dashed out of the house.

I knocked a man over who was passing at the moment, and landed myself on my head in the gutter. The man picked himself up, and was about to retaliate, when the glare of the street lamp revealed to me the well known face of my John Smith.

'Wait your wife Melinda, the eldest daughter of my father's great uncle Bryne?' 'The same!' said he, grasping my hand, 'and I am delighted to see you! But you needn't come at a fellow so.'

He took me home with him, and I had a good taste; I saw Melinda; any more—I met and was pro, erly introduced to Hattie Smith—and—and—in due course of time will be married—that's settled.

See what the most popular and widely circulated periodicals say of our Establishment:

From the "Dispatch" of February 25, 1865.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the announcement of Messrs. Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, Silver Ware, and Fancy Goods, in our advertising columns. We are personally acquainted with the members of this firm and know them to be gentlemen of sterling worth and integrity. Their stock of goods, for variety and extent, we have scarcely seen paralleled.

From the "Mirror of Fashion," March 1, 1865.

Messrs. Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, etc., opened on the 15th ult., and we venture to say that no finer display of goods was ever exhibited by any establishment in this city. The ladies thronged their bazaar almost to suffocation, although the streets were rendered nearly impassable by the melted snow and slush. We predict for them a wonderful success.

From the "Ledger," February 28, 1865.

Our lady friends should visit the extensive establishment of Messrs. Devaugh & Co., No. 15 Maiden Lane, if they wish to indulge themselves with a sight which they will long remember. Such a profusion of elegant Watches Chains, Rings, Earrings, and, in short, of Jewelry of every name, kind and description, we never before witnessed. Their silver and plated ware is superb and almost casts into the shade the other splendid establishments which have long been the boast of our city. It is estimated that their stock is worth not less than one million of dollars.

How You Can Get a Prize.

Send Twenty-Five Cents to us, and as soon as we receive it we will mail you a Certificate, showing what you are entitled to. If the article or articles please you, send back the Certificate and One Dollar and we will forward you the article, no matter how costly it may be. If the article is not what you wish, state, when you send the Certificate and dollar, what other article of the same value you prefer and we will send it. If you wish more than one Certificate send us $1 and we will send five; for $2, eleven; for $5, thirty; for $10, sixty; for $15, one hundred.

Agents are wanted in the Army and in every place. We have an immense stock of goods to dispose of, and need a large number of Agents. Our terms to Agents are very liberal and some even of our Lady Agents are making from $5 to $20 a day. We give Agents 50 per cent. on all Certificates they sell provided they remit not less than $1 for eight.

☞ Write your name and address distinctly and say only what is necessary.

PIANO-FORTES

DRIGGS' NEW PATENT.

ARE THE ONLY INSTRUMENTS constructed on a truly scientific principle That have greater strength, and will remain longer in tune than any other Piano The construction is simple and natural, all the extraneous lumber in the body of the instrumen is dispensed with; the sound boards are merely two arched planks of thin wood, like the front and back of a violin; the strings are attached to a strong iron fram , which is separate and entirely independent of the case, thereby dispensing with the old fa shi n of stripping by substituting straight bridges, preserving at the same time The Over Strung Base, of which Mr Driggs is the inventor. By these improvements we gain much more vibratory pow r, at the same time preserving all its purity and richness of tone.

They have received the highest testimonials from the Press, and all the principal artists in the country, among which are:

Harry Sanderson,	L. M. Gottschalk,
M x Maretzek,	S. Limberg,
Theodore Eisfield,	Wm Mason,
Herman Wollenhaupt,	A Baril,
Francis H. Brown,	M. Strackosch,
Sam. Henry Fry,	Charlie Fradel

Mr. EGESMUND TJALBERG, the great pianist, says:—I have examined your new Piano-fortes and I cordially approve of its system of construction. Its principle, by which great increase of vibratory power is obtained being very simple and perfectly philosophical. The tone is grand and noble; it has great capacity for sustaining the sound or singing, and its volume of tone or power I have never heard excelled in depth, purity and sympathetic sweetness.

We respectfully invite all those who may desire to supply themselves with a superior article, to come and examine the Unrivalled Machine.

But in a more especial manner do we elicit the patronage of

Merchant Tailors,	Corset Makers,
Coach Makers,	Quilter Fitters,

GREAT IMPROVEMENT IN

SEWING MACHINES.

EMPIRE SHUTTLE MACHINE!

PATENTED FEB. 14th, 1860.

Saleswoms, { 536 Broadway, New York. / 252 Washington St., Boston.

THIS MACHINE is constructed on entirely new principles of great and unsurpassing many rare and valuable improvements, having been examined by the most profound experts, and pronounced to be

Simplicity and Perfection Combined.

It has a straight needle, perpendicular action, makes the lock or chain stitch, which will neither rip nor ravel, and is alike on both sides; performs perfect sewing on every description of material, from leather to the finest Nansook muslin, with cotton, linen or silk thread, from the coarsest to the finest number. Having neither CAM nor COGWHEEL, and the least possible friction, it runs as smooth as glass and is

Emphatically a Noiseless Machine.

It requires FIFTY PER CENT less power to drive it than any other Machine in the market. A girl twelve years of age can work it steadily, without fatigue or injury to health

Its strength and Wonderful Simplicity of construction renders it alm st impossible to get out of order, and is GUARANTEED by the Company to give entire satisfaction

We respectfully invite all those who may desire to supply themselves with a superior article, to come and examine the Unrivalled Machine.

Relief in Ten Minutes.

BRYAN'S

PULMONIC WAFERS!

The most certain and speedy remedy ever discovered for all diseases of the Chest and Lungs, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Consumption, Bronchitis, Influenza, Hoarseness, Difficult Breathing, Sore Throat &c. &c.

THESE Wafers give the most instantaneous and perfect relief, when persevered with according to directions never fail to effect a rapid and lasting cure. Thousands have been restored to perfect health, who have tried other means in vain. To all diseases and all constitutions they are a blessing and cure—none need despair, no matter how long the disease may have existed, or how severe it may be, provided the organic structure of the vital organs is not hopelessly decayed. Every one afflicted should give them an impartial trial.

TO VOCALISTS AND PUBLIC SPEAKERS.

These Wafers are peculiarly valuable, they will in one day remove the most severe occasional hoarseness and their regular use for a few days will, at all times, increase the power and inflexibility of the voice, greatly improving its tone, compass, and clearness, at which purpose they are regularly used by many Professional Vocalists.

FINKLE & LYON

SEWING MACHINE CO.

OFFICE 521 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

GUARANTEE.—After a fair trial, if any purchaser does not regard the Finkle & Lyon Sewing Machine as superior to any machine in market, he can return it and have his money. It has taken many of the highest prizes.—Is less complicated than any other first class machine,—does a wider range of work without changing,—requires no taking apart to clean or oil, and no "tension" to set needle, regulate tension, or operate machine.

N. B. Any Clergyman sending us two orders for Machines, shall receive one for himself as a present. The same proposition is extended to Professors and Teachers.

We have now completed our New Manufactory at a cost of some $200,000, including New Patents and important Improvements; and the object of the above proposition is to secure the immediate introduction of our improved machine into every town in the United States without incurring the great expense of a travelling agent.

This proposition cannot avail in towns occupied by our own agents.

Please send for descriptive Catalogue, with samples of sewing.

The Daily Telegraph.

AT the present crisis of Provincial affairs, the publishers feel that there is room in the City of Toronto for an independent evening Journal, which, without party spirit, shall discuss dispassionately the important issues now occupying so large a share of public attention. Journals fettered by political ties, and biassed by particular interests, are not free to present to their readers these issues in the broad and comprehensive manner which is now more than ever desirable. In addition to this, events now crowd so thickly upon us that the public naturally desire more frequent supplies of information than the morning papers can give. To meet these desiderata the publication of THE DAILY TELEGRAPH is designed. Although attached to no political party,

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH

will give no uncertain sound upon public affairs Amongst other things, it will advocate:—

1. British Connection, strenuously opposing the formation of any political union with the neighbouring Republic.

2. Confederation of the British North American Provinces so soon as the full consent of the Maritime Provinces is obtained. This measure is imperatively required by the hostile commercial and political attitude of the United States government. It is, moreover, desirable as forming the germ of nationality which may be further developed in the future.

3. Free Trade, as far as is compatible with the necessities of the revenue; also, a renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty with our neighbors as soon as they are prepared to treat with us upon just and equitable terms.

4. The encouragement of Emigration and a more liberal management of the public lands, so as to promote the opening up of our waste territory and its occupation by bona fide settlers.

5. The Extension of Trade Relations with other British colonies and with foreign nations.

6. In British affairs moderate and judicious reform, but not violent organic change in a Democratic direction.

Other public questions, as they arise, will be dealt with in the same moderate and liberal spirit.

During the approaching session of Parliament its proceedings will be duly reported, and at all times the latest intelligence received up to the time of going to press will be published.

The Markets and matters of interest to commercial men will receive special attention in THE DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Of all local matters of public importance, courts of law, school boards, public meetings, &c., &c., full and accurate reports will be given. To the proceedings of the City Council special attention will be given, and in corporation matters THE DAILY TELEGRAPH will, contrary to the present practice, give an unswerving support to those who faithfully serve the interests of the city, irrespective of party and political leanings.

At the same time it will unsparingly expose all abuses and denounce all corruption, no matter who the guilty parties may be.

The first number will be issued on the 21st May, neatly printed on good white paper, delivered to subscribers at the rate of $5 per year, payable in advance, or ten cents per week.—Subscriptions by post, $4.50 per annum, invariably in advance.

TRUTH.

Truth is a gem dropt from the skies;
The brightest in Golconda's mine
Would rank a poor and paltry prize
Against this lustrous gem divine.

Truth is a flower of sweet perfume,
That fades not 'neath a wintry sky,
But still retains its wonted bloom
When other flowrets droop and die.

Truth is a sweet, endearing charm
Of angel power and heavenly birth,
That shields the faithful soul from harm,
And forms a paradise on earth.

Truth is a grain of priceless seed,
That springs within the human heart,
Till choked by falsehood's baneful weed,
Or marred by hypocritic art.

Truth is a lamp, whose constant beams
Emit a kind and cheering ray —
An orb of light whose golden gleams
I lume the Christian's heaven-ward way.

This gem, this flower, this talisman,
This seed in the heart's regions sown —
This lamp to guide the feet of man—
O reader! make them all thine own.

Literature.

A Year After Marriage.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

CHAPTER I.

'The time is almost here, Fanny,' said Mrs. Woodman, with a pleasant smile, addressing her young friend, Fanny Dale.

'Yes; so-morrow I shall be Mrs. Lee' was the laughing reply. 'Mrs. Lee! Mrs. Lee! How queer it will sound! But no matter; I shall soon get used to it. And how happy I will be, Mrs. Woodman!'

'I sincerely hope that, in regard to happiness, the full measure of your anticipations may be filled.'

'You seem to speak doubtingly,' Fanny said, looking into the face of her friend with an expression something like surprise visible on her bright young countenance.

'Before a year has passed, you will understand the reason.'

'You talk very strangely, Mrs. Woodman!'

'Why so, Fanny?'

'What do you mean by my understanding your remark better after a year has passed?'

'You expect to be very happy?'

'Certainly I do! And have I not the very best reason in the world for anticipating a high degree of pleasure? Am I not about to become the wife of Harvey Lee, of whom you have ever spoken in terms of warmest praise, and whom I love deeply and devotedly? Surely, to love him, and to be beloved in return, must make me happy! Nothing has occurred, I hope, to cause an alteration in your feelings toward Harvey?' Fanny's countenance slightly changed as she asked the question.

'Nothing, of course,' was the quick reply. 'The longer I know him, the more do I admire his character. He is a young man of firm principles, and a feeling heart. And yet, even though such a man is to become your husband, I do not think you will realize the degree of happiness you so fondly anticipate.'

'Why not, Mrs. Woodman?' Fanny's voice had in it a slight degree of huskiness.

'That is exactly the question I would like to hear you ask. In answering it, I may, perhaps, give you some pain. But if I can only succeed in making you understand me, and feel the force of what I say, that slight sensation of pain will save you many an hour of bitterness. Do not look alarmed.'

'Indeed, indeed, Mrs. Woodman, you make me feel wretched! What can you mean by talking to me so, just at the time?'

'Certainly, I had no intention of giving you even the slightest feeling of uneasiness when I commenced. Nor is there any reason why you should be troubled. As a friend, who has numbered twice your years, and passed far on the journey you are but just commencing, I felt that I ought drop into your ear a warning word, not to make you unhappy—but to provide for your greater happiness in the future. You have said, that you anticipate a great degree of pleasure, in view of your marriage with Harvey Lee?'

'I do. And I think with much reason.'

'And so do I. There is no young man in the circle of my acquaintance, whom I would rather see your husband, than Mr. Lee. And yet he is no more perfect than you are.'

'Of course he is not perfect, Mrs. Woodman. No one is perfect.'

'Very true. And it is a just appreciation of the fact you have uttered, that I wish to awaken in your mind. If he be not perfect, then he has some bias of character with which it is all important that you should become early acquainted, in order that you may avoid the doing or saying of any thing that would produce a jar of discord between you.'

'Discord! How can you talk of discord ever existing between Harvey and myself?'

'Discord, Fanny, means want of accord; or a difference, or contrariety of qualities, destroying harmony. For instance: He is a young man who has had no one to oppose him in any thing that he wished to do, for years. And you have acted for some time under the guardance of your own rational appreciation of the fitness or unfitness of whatever has been presented to your mind that was to be done, or left undone. This action from the dictation of your own thoughts and inclinations, has become with both of you a habit, and will, I fear, be the source of discord.'

'How so, Mrs. Woodman?'

'Can you not plainly see, that he will not always be ready to yield to your difference of opinion, where both have to act in one way, nor you be willing to yield under like circumstances?'

'I must confess, that I do not see any great difficulty in the case you state. Both of us, I presume, will be ready, on all occasions, to yield our preferences to those of the one we love.'

'Think abstractly on the subject, Fanny, and I am sure you will see that your conclusion is not a correct one. There will be times, often and often occurring, when long confirmed habits of mind will claim indulgence, even though opposition to one you love be involved.'

'But, Mrs. Woodman, I cannot for my life see what Harvey and myself can possibly have to differ about. Our ends will be the same.'

'The merest trifles form, often, the most serious grounds of misunderstanding,' was the friend's reply. 'And these will mar your happiness if marred at all; for between you and Harvey Lee there cannot exist any difference of importance.'

'Still, Mrs. Woodman, I must confess that I am utterly at a loss how to understand you, for I can form no idea of ground of difference, trifling or important.'

'And much I fear, Fanny, that while in your present state of mind I shall be unable to make apparent the danger against which I desire to guard you. But, as I have intimated before, it will lie in the disposition you will both feel, at times, to yield a point of difference. And will be continued, until one of the parties gives way, and both, then, are brought into a state to see, rationally, the true relation borne to each other, as man and wife. The giving way, I apprehend, will have to be on your part. Fanny. And the sooner you can learn a degree of submission to the will of your husband, the better. Not that I suppose he will desire to domineer over you. Far from it. I am sure he will not. But I am also sure, that he will not submit to your domineering over him.'

'Indeed, Mrs. Woodman, I never heard you talk so incomprehensibly before, in my life!' was the reply of Fanny Dale to this. 'What in the world could have put it into your head to suppose that I had any desire to domineer over my husband? I am sure that you altogether misjudge me.'

'I should certainly have misjudged you, Fanny, if I had supposed that, in your thought or intention, there existed any such desire. But if, after your marriage, there should be a disposition manifested on your part to have your own way in matters of trifling moment, the appearance will be that of a wish to rule or domineer it over your husband. And this will lead to unpleasant collisions between you, which ought, above all things, to be guarded against.'

'But you do not mean to set it down as a rule, Mrs. Woodman, that I must be passive and submissive on all occasions? That I must give up my own will, and become a mere nonentity?'

'Not by any means. This would be, I was about to say, worse than a state of open discord. You shall rather seek to think and act in concert with your husband, than not to think or act at all.'

'And that is just the way that I expect to think and act. No other idea has ever crossed my mind. Still, now that I am thinking on the subject, it does occur to me that Harvey may, sometimes, wish to control me in matters that do not need his interference.'

'Well? What then?'

'I am not sure that I shall feel inclined to yield a passive submission to a mere spirit of opposition, should such a spirit show itself.'

'Suppose, however, that in thus yielding, your husband would be brought into a state of mind to see that he, perhaps, was a little too exacting, and to feel the rebuke of your gentle and self-sacrificing spirit? Would not submission on your part be the best and wisest course?'

'But how could I know that such would be the effect? Besides, I should feel a little pride in the matter.'

'No doubt of it, Fanny. And that pride, felt on both sides, whenever a difference shall arise, and arise it most certainly will, must prove the fruitful source of unhappiness.'

'We had much better, then, not get married at all,' was the maiden's response, uttered with some bitterness of expression.

'Much better, I would rather say, shun, in the marriage state, all causes of discord, and seek in every act and word to promote a conjunction of your minds into one. An end of marriage is, that two may become one. Man was created male and female, and is not perfect until the male and female become truly united and form one man.—The masculine principle in the soul of the woman, are ever in the effort to unite and form one truly effective principle, if I may so call it, that shall act as a single being.—Not to be merely adjoined to each other, but to be conjoined as one. Until this takes place, man is not truly man.'

'Nor woman truly woman, I suppose you would say,' Fanny added.

'To say so, would, perhaps enable you more clearly to apprehend my meaning. But, I would rather say, that the man, so called, is a male man, and the woman, a female man, and that both together, when truly conjoined, make one perfect man.'

'Then, of course, the woman is nothing. She is lost in the man.'

'Not by any means a correct inference. The man and the woman are distinct and necessary parts of a just whole. Separated, they are imperfect, act in an imperfect manner, are not truly happy, and tend, by a strong inward principle of affinity, toward conjunction. But they can never be truly conjoined until they have like ends in view, and proceed to the attainment of those ends in perfect unity of action.'

'I can perceive, in some small degree, what all this means,' Fanny said in a grave tone, after her friend had uttered the last remark. 'But, as to understanding you fully, I must confess myself at fault. It sounds all very pretty to call two, a man and a wife, one; but the generality, evidence I presume, is, that they are as distinctly two as it is possible to be. For my part, I have no notion of becoming a mere cipher from the day I am married, and I have very much mistaken Harvey Lee, if he has any different idea in the matter. For years I have been in the habit of reasoning upon the subject of action to a just conclusion, and then acting from that conclusion. So I must continue to do.'

'And likewise your husband.'

'Of course.'

'Suppose, then, it should happen, as it no doubt will, that Harvey and you come to a different conclusion in regard to some matter requiring joint action; what then?'

'Well, what then?'

'One of you will have to yield, of course.'

'Well?'

'Who shall it be? Your husband or yourself?'

'It will depend, I suppose, upon the comparative soundness of the reasons advanced.'

'But suppose each considers the reasons on his or her side the strongest. What then?'

'Your case is only a supposed one, Mrs. Woodman.'

'That was granted from the first.'

'But such a case I do not believe will ever occur.'

'For fear that it may occur would it not be well to settle, beforehand, some principle of action?'

'I am very willing to let all exigencies of this kind provide for themselves,' Fanny replied. "Certain I am, that between Harvey and myself will never exist misunderstandings of a nature to require the aid of any previously settled principles of action. We never have disagreed thus far, and I do not suppose that we ever will. In all our intercourse there has been manifested by him a disposition to consult my views and feelings in almost everything, and conform himself to them.'

'A course of action on his part, that I have noticed, and always condemned.'

'Why so?'

'Because it is calculated to mislead you in regard to his true character, and to the relation that must exist after marriage. It is this very conduct in young men during the period preceding marriage, that I always have and always shall condemn.—Anxious to gain favor with the maiden who has called out his affections, the lover too often presents himself in a character that is not really his own. He yields everything to the young lady's preferences—consults her on every point of action, and chooses what she sanctions, no matter how much he may desire another course. Her own will indulged, and her own choice made his, before marriage, she never imagines that he will, after that period, sometimes desire, and even determine to have things his own way. When he does so, too often the effect is like a dark cloud suddenly obscuring a summer sky. Usually, it takes a year at least for the two fully to understand each other, and to definite truly their positions.'

Much more conversation than that which we have given took place between Fanny Dale and her friend, but it was of too serious a character to make any impression upon the mind of the happy-hearted maiden. She saw no danger, and feared none. Thus far her intercourse with Lee had been of the most pleasant character. He had rarely opposed her in anything; and had always seemed to take delight in preferring her wishes to his own. From this exhibition of his character she had judged him, and upon this she was willing to rest her expectations of perfect agreement in all things after marriage. The next chapter will show whether this appearance was the true expression of his real state of mind.

CHAPTER II.

One evening about a week previous to the time mixed at the preceding chapter, Harvey Lee sat conversing with Fanny. The near approach of their marriage naturally led them to talk upon subjects connected with that event. As Fanny resided with a widowed aunt, who could not bear either the expense or fatigue of giving the young bride a wedding party, it had been determined to have the ceremony performed in the morning, and then to take a little journey for four or five days. The father and mother of Lee lived at Harrisburg in Pennsylvania, and he desired very much to go there and spend a week with them. To this, however, Fanny was for some reason disinclined, and avowed a decided preference for a trip to New York and Boston.

'Any arrangement that will give you the most pleasure, Fanny,' had been his reply to her expressed desire to visit the North, as it had been in regard to almost everything else, although he could not help thinking at the moment that he should have loved her more if she had manifested a disposition to pay some little deference to his wishes.

'So you are still in favor of a journey to New York and Boston?' he remarked on the evening just alluded to.

'O, yes, Harvey—decidedly! I have never been to either of those cities, and therefore desire to visit them very much.'

'I wish you could make up your mind to go to Harrisburg.'

'O, no,' shaking her head with a determined air. 'Harrisburg is such a dull place. I had a thousand times rather go to New York and Boston.'

'Very well, Fanny, let us go North, then. Anything to meet your views.'

'It will be such a pleasant jaunt. And then we can go up to Harrisburg some other time.'

'Very true. But father and mother will be disappointed, I am sure, at our not coming there.'

'O, no, I presume not. Tell them that I wanted to go North particularly.'

Seeing that Fanny had set her heart, as it is said, on going to New York and Boston Lee smiled an assent and then waived the subject; although he felt disappointed at her pertinacious adherence to her previously expressed preference. The fact was, he was very desirous of presenting her at once to his father and mother, for whom he entertained a strong affection, and whose approval of his choice, he was anxious to have. Fanny had never seen them, and had a feeling of reluctance at the thought of visiting them immediately after the marriage. Instead of endeavoring to conquer this feeling for the sake of Harvey, whose desire to go at once to Harrisburg she knew to be a very natural one, she selfishly chose to have her own wishes gratified at the sacrifice of his.

'There is to be a concert to-morrow night,' Harvey remarked, during the same evening.

'Yes, so I saw by the newspapers this morning.'

'Would you like to go?'

'I hardly think that I care about going.'

'I was in hopes you would feel inclined, for my sake.'

'Why? Do you wish to go?'

'Yes, very much.'

'I wish I felt like going. But I really do not,' Fanny replied to this.

'Then I would not at course think of it,' Harvey said, at the same time that it occurred to him how often he had denied himself to gratify her simply expressed desire. This thought, however, he instantly put away, as one not to be indulged for a moment.

When Lee sat down in his own room, after his return home that night, he did not feel as comfortable in mind as usual, for he was inclined to indulge in an accusing spirit against Fanny. Almost involuntarily his mind went back through the whole period of their intercourse, noting as it went along for too many instances of a too apparent disposition to have her own way, even in opposition to his declared views and feelings. From this state of mind, however, he at last aroused himself, with an effort, at the same time that he condemned the unkind and ungenerous spirit, as he termed it, in which he had indulged.

On the next evening he visited Fanny, as usual, and spent two or three hours most delightfully. Nothing occurred to recall the impression made on the preceding evening. Nor did he suffer his mind to fall again into a similar train of thinking during the brief period that intervened before the day of their marriage.

That event occurred in due time, as previously arranged, and the happy couple spent the first ten days of their married life in visiting the cities of New York and Boston. On their return, and previously to going to housekeeping, the young husband urged so hard a visit to his parents, that Fanny consented to go, but with too evident a feeling of reluctance. Her brief trip to Harrisburg, and especially her sojourn there, was far pleasanter than she had anticipated. The spirit and manner of old Mr. and Mrs. Lee's attentions, touched her feelings with an instant affection for them, and she almost regretted the necessity of leaving their quiet roof when the time came for her return home.

After this visit, a house was rented and furnished, and the young couple settled down in the usual domestic way. They were very happy—so happy that it formed a constant subject of reference. This continued about two months, when a circumstance transpired that marred their pleasant intercourse.

Notwithstanding the advice and warning of Mrs. Woodman, Fanny was apparently unconscious of the fact that she was taking her husband with the necessity of yielding in almost everything to her will. His sincere affection for her, which prompted him, in its first stages, to prefer her pleasure in everything to his own, began at length to grow weary of such a system of non-reciprocity. From thinking at times, that it was a little strange that she should not be as ready to consult his wishes, wants and preferences, as he was to consult hers, he began to feel annoyed at her constant requirement of him to yield up his will to hers. These did not generally regard things of moment, or out of her sphere of action, but things in regard to which either might act or direct.

Every new recurrence of what he had allowed himself to call her arbitrary desire to have everything her own way, tended to sour his feelings in a degree, and make him less able to bear her thoughtless spirit of opposition.

One evening, about this time, he proposed, after tea, that they should call upon a friend. Fanny did not feel very well, although she had said nothing about it to her husband. She felt, in consequence, altogether disinclined to go out, and said that she would rather stay at home. It was only the evening before that she had declined a similar proposition. In spite of his efforts to keep down his feelings, Harvey Lee could not help showing his disapprobation, even to the extent of words.

'It seems to me, Fanny,' he said, with some severity, 'only necessary that I should express a desire to do a thing, for you to feel altogether disinclined to do that very thing.'

The young wife started, as if from a blow looked for a moment in to the face of her husband, that was cold and stern almost to anger, and then bursting into tears, arose quickly and left the chamber without uttering a word. The heart of Lee smote him, almost instantly, for what he had said.—But it had been said, and what was more, so he reasoned, it was the truth. He did not attempt to follow his wife, but sat absorbed in a kind of gloomy, morose spirit of self-condemnation, alternating with a spirit of still more bitter condemnation of the unfortunate habit which Fanny had indulged.

The first unkind word and look of her husband, so unexpected, and, it seemed to her, so uncalled for and unjust, wounded Mrs. Lee deeply. So soon as she fully comprehended the import of what he had said, and saw by his countenance that he was in earnest, it seemed, for a moment or two, as if she would suffocate.

After she had retired to her room, and the first wild abolition of her feelings had subsided, she began to look for her husband to come with apologies, or explanations, or something to break the force of the harsh words he had uttered, too evidently in anger. But the minutes continued to pass slowly away, and she yet sat alone and weeping in her chamber.

Meanwhile, he remained in the parlor, a prey to unhappy thoughts and feelings. He was angry with himself and angry with his wife. Regretting his hasty and ill-timed remark, he still felt no inclination whatever to recall his words, or to make a single effort to soothe the heart he was conscious of having deeply wounded. Thus he remained for nearly two hours, when the usual time for retiring having come, he went up to his wife's chamber, with his state of mind but little changed.

His evident disposition to offer no concessions for what he had said, had long before that time aroused in the mind of Fanny something of pride, and a resolution, painful as it might be, to bear his unkind remark without stooping to ask an explanation, or to endeavor to make him concious that he had wronged her. She had, consequently, retired to bed some time previous to her husband's coming up from the parlor. Not the slightest movement did she make on his entrance into the chamber, but remained, apparently asleep, with her face more than half buried beneath the bed clothes. In a few minutes he laid himself down by her side, without uttering a word, and thus they remained for nearly half the night, before they sunk into sleep, the mind of each painfully active, and each conscious that the other was fully awake.

There is indeed a blessed influence in sleep. It not only refreshes and restores the body to a healthy action, but the mind also. And not only the intellectual principle of the mind, but the will principle.—Evil spirits have less power over us after a night's refreshing repose—they cannot then so readily flow in with their suggestions. The unkindness we may have felt toward a brother, exists in a far milder form than it did ere we gave ourselves up to the sweet and gentle influence of holy sleep.

Mr. and Mrs. Lee found, when they awoke on the next morning, a milder spirit reigning in their breasts. He was disposed to think less unkindly of his wife, and to excuse the fault, as he still called it, that had provoked him into the utterance of a harsh word—and she, likewise, felt like judging him as leniently as possible. But neither was prepared to allude to the cause of difference. He still remained firm in the idea that she had been to blame, and she still felt that he had wronged her.—Each, therefore, looked to the other for concessions, while neither was prepared to offer them. Still, both were anxious for a reconciliation, and both were disposed to do all that could be done without giving up certain individual rights, or whatever they might choose to call them.

The consequence was, that although each spoke to the other in tones of kindness, and each tried to chase from the other's brow the cloud that still rested there, neither of them made the slightest allusion to what had occurred on the previous evening. In this both were wrong. Humiliating explanations, such as would have resulted from those allusions, though they must have been mortifying, would yet have been salutary, for they would have presented in clear light to each the true ground of difficulty, produced mutual concessions and mutual confidence, and been a guarantee for future harmony upon just principles. But in suffering, as they did, the wound to close with a portion of the arrow's barb unextracted, they were but providing for severer trials.

A young minister, in a highly elaborate sermon which he preached while supplying an absent minister's pulpit, said several times when giving some new exposition of a passage: "The critics and commentators don't agree with me here." Next morning a poor woman came to see him with something in her apron. She said her husband had heard his sermon and thought it was a very fine one; and as he said "the commentators did not agree with him here he had sent some of the best Jersey blues."

An Irishman addicted to telling strange stories said, he saw a man beheaded with his hands tied behind him, who directly picked up his head and put it on his shoulders in the right place. "Ha, ha, ha," said a bystander, "How could he do that when his hands were tied behind him?" "And sure what a pretty fool you must be," said Pat, "and couldn't he pick it up with his teeth. To old Nick wid yer bothersation!"

SHARP.—The past fall, as a lady, modestly attired, was on her way to the city of New York, on board one of the Hudson River night boats, she sat quietly reading in the ladies' cabin, when a flashily-dressed dame, mistaking her for a servant, rather rudely accosted her with "Do you know this cabin is for ladies?" "Certainly, I do," was the answer, "and have been wondering for some time why you were here."

As a canal boat was passing under a bridge, the captain gave the usual warning, "Look out!" when a little Frenchman popping his head out of the window, received a severe thump. He drew it back in a great pet and exclaimed, "Dese Americans are queer people, dey say, 'Look out,' when dey mean Look in!"

"Pap, I planted some potatoes in our garden," said one of the last youths of our country, "and what do you think came up?" "Why potatoes, of course." "No sir-ee! There came up a drove of hogs and ate 'em all." The "old man" gave in.

An Irishman attending a Quaker meeting, heard a young friend make the following announcement: "Brethren and sisters, I am going to marry a daughter of the Lord." "The devil you are," said Pat. "Faith as he jabers so it'll be a long time before ye'll see yer father-in-law."

SHOPPING.—A lady, a regular shopper who had made an unfortunate assistant rack over all the house, objected that none were long enough. I want the longest bows that are made. Then madam, was the reply, you had better apply to the next orgamebone.

Different sounds travel with different degrees of velocity. A call for dinner will run over a ten acre lot in a minute and a half, while a summons to work will take from five to ten minutes.

A remarkable hard drinker, who was aspiring, begged one of his friends to bring him a gourd of water, telling him, "On our deathbeds we must be reconciled to our enemies."

The man who undertook to blast his neighbor's pre-pects used too short a fuse, and got blown up himself.

Celebration of the Queen's Birthday

THE REVIEW OF VOLUNTEERS.

Ye Grand Army of Ye Terribles in Procession.

Volunteer Lunch,—A Decided Success.

The Celebration all that could be desired.

Stirred up by previous announcements for the celebration of our Sovereign's birthday, crowds of all ranks and sizes of the people from the surrounding country were seen flocking into Town at a very early hour, and before 9 o'clock—the time announced for the arrival of the train that was to bring the Volunteers of Port Hope and the Council and Harbour Commissioners and the Millbrook Volunteers—the Town was literally crowded waiting to witness the reception, review and processions of the day.

The crowds of people equaled any thing ever before in Peterboro, not excepting the Prince of Wales visit. Several times the street from Scott's Block to Ormond & Gilmour's corner was crowded so that passing was impossible, while at the same time there were hundreds scattered over the whole town, all trying to enjoy themselves.

ARRIVAL OF THE TRAIN.

At sharp 9 the whistle was heard and immediately the moving mass was wending its way in the direction of the station; but on seeing the arrival of the Millbrook Volunteers only, considerable disappointment was manifested. It appears that although the Port Hope Volunteers had been invited and had promised to come, they were disappointed owing to some other arrangements.

The Millbrook Volunteers, however, were there under the command of Captain Howden, Lieutenant Turner and Ensign Hunter, but owing to some little delay, the Volunteers of Peterborough were put forward to receive them and a few minutes delay was occasioned thereby. We must not forget to mention, however, that Port Hope Brass Band did not forget to come, as they were on the ground in good trim. As soon as the companies were mustered, they proceeded to the Ashburnham cricket ground, where they went through various battalion evolutions and movements in a most creditable manner, an old Waterloo veteran remarking that the men acquitted themselves like regulars.

The companies present were:—the Rifles under Capt. Poole, and Capt. Kennedy's Infantry Company, Peterborough; Capt. Rogers' Infantry Company, Ashburnham; Capt. Leigh's of Lakefield, and Captain Howden's of Millbrook. The men all looked fine and it would not surprise us if we learned that Red Coats were at a premium in the estimation of the fair sex, who thronged the grounds. It would be invidious to particularise as to the efficiency of the drill of each company, as all did their part well, yet the readiness of the Rifles was as visible as any, but they are of old standing compared with the others, and, perhaps, should manifest proficiency. The firing of the whole was good—the Rifles excellent. All the companies are worthy of the greatest praise for their patience, energy and loss of time in thus preparing to defend our homes and liberties. At early 12 they all assembled on the Market Square and there wound up by a feu de joie, preparatory to their grand attack on the Engine House.

THE PROCESSION.

Immediately "ye Redoubtable and Invincible Army of ye Terribles" appeared, commanded by their Generalissimo, Prince of Timbucdahyrucagriphilia, assisted by Shannusmardechenwanacandumasakenerous, A. D. C., and Ishifulaemiricamephophoerso ffhoonering, a newly appointed A. D. C.—This was most decidedly the great attraction of the day. The procession was well arranged, and ye different divisions and companies of ye Grand Army fully sustained their former reputation. Several new features and improvements were visible since their last grand review. Their number has been increased, the preparation more natured, the army in good regulation, our only wonder being, amidst all the hurry and stir and the difficulties of keeping supletons and children out of the way, how they managed to avoid hurting any one. The following was the order of procession:—

1. Ye Commander-in-chief and his spouse, superbly dressed after the fashions and follies of the day. Waterfall and all the fripperies of fashion.
2. Ye guard of honor.
3. Ye Ancient Orator from ye native country, Hapsidam, ye land where whang doodle mourns.
4. Ye band, led by one from the land of Sourkrowtandlagerbeer.
5. Ye representatives of the Aborigines neatly mounted.
6. Ye Scommon Scoundrels or City Fathers disinterred from the bowels of the earth, in South America.
7. Ye blustering leaders of the Finnegans from the land of Erinnanumpinbutslygagh. Then follow the Finnegans; Pioneers for Hellamboosaddyari; these were followed by the Lords and Commons of Canada, and Musicians.

A new feature in the procession was the steamers Corinthian and Rochester, and the Railroad interest represented by the Engine Mr. Fowler, right on the track for Lakefield, and the marble quarries of the back country.

This great army and its leaders deserve the thanks of all who witnessed its manoeuvres for the manner in which they performed their part, and for the quota of amusement they provided for the day. It cost immense labor, loss of time, and money to equip the men and get up the "rigs," and were it not that they have disappeared into the bowels of the earth again. We certainly think that they deserve a public acknowledgement; they need not expect this from the men of Peterborough; if ever they get an acknowledgement it will come from the ladies who only know how to do these things right.

The speech of "Ye Orator" was a good one and touched on several enterprises engaged in or proposed. It is needless to say it was appauded by the army. This brought the time round to lunch hour when the general movement was towards the engine house, which had been kindly placed at the disposal of the ladies for the purpose of receiving and accommodating their guests.

This large shed was beautifully fitted up and decorated with evergreens and mottoes, as ladies only can do. Three huge tables were erected almost the whole length, there being three shorter ones at one end placed breadth-wise. And it is only a faint description to say that the tables groaned under the piles of viands provided.

About 300 sat down to the elegent repast, and ample justice they did the good things. If the Volunteers and others can fight Fenians and destroy earthworks and redoubts as well as they defaced the ham, pies, cakes, tarts, &c., &c., their country will never have reason to fear an enemy, or the ladies of Peterborough to regret that they entertained them. The lunch was elegantly got up, and a double charm added to it by the presence of the liberal hearts and cheerful faces that provided it. We noticed Mrs. Sheriff Hall, Mrs. R. Nichols, Mrs. R. Denniston, Mrs. J. J. Hall, Mrs. John Gilmour and several others, whose names deserve to be remembered by the Volunteers, but we regret we cannot give them, in one lucky corner, and all indefatigable in waiting on the tables and heaping of their abundance before those seated. Enough had been provided for 500, and when those present had satisfied themselves, there were heaps left untouched.

After lunch was over, Mayor Scott, who presided, said that in order not to be tedious, and also to enable those present an opportunity of witnessing the races and other amusements, he would be very brief in the toasts about to be proposed, and the first one was one that could not and would not be forgotten by Canadians, but especially not by the Volunteers, viz:—

"The health of our Sovereign Queen Victoria."

It is needless to say that this was drunk most enthusiastically, and with deafening cheers. Music by the band, God save the Queen. And here, by the way, let us remark that freely did the band intersperse its sweet airs during the the lunch, and also during the time of the speeches, so that several of the speakers were enabled to speak to sweet music.

The second toast was

"The Governor General of British North America."

Song—"For he's a jolly good fellow."

The next was proposed by Sheriff Hall, viz:—

"The Army, Navy, and Volunteers of Canada."

Col. Hunltain responded for the army.—He remarked that he had the honor to belong to one branch of the toast, the army, and that wherever there were British men, aye! and British women, this toast would be most cordially received. The love of justice ever belonged to all those branches. Their duty was to preserve justice and liberty; to protect, defend and extend liberty and justice, never to destroy them, and this he knew they would continue to do. It was an honor, therefore, to be connected with those services. He (Col. H.) thanked them heartily for the honor that had been done him in drinking the health of the army.

Captain Rutledge responded in behalf of the Navy. When he (Capt. R.) belonged to the Navy their ships were "wooden walls" and the men "hearts of oak". Now their ships were iron walls. Great changes had been made in the shipping of Great Britain since his time in the service, but he was sure every man in the service was still ready to carry out Lord Nelson's great motto, "Britain expects every man to do his duty," and were ready to do their duty, as the army and navy always had done, and the Volunteers would do if called upon.

Captain Poole, of the Rifles, had pleasure in responding on behalf of the Volunteers, and this the more as the Volunteers had been coupled with the Army and Navy of Great Britain. Shortness, however, being the order of the day, he would be brief. It was an honor to belong to the Volunteers because their name was coupled with the Army and Navy, and he trusted what the Volunteers had done when called out lately, they would do again, that is—turn out at once and do their duty, even though that duty should be to leave their homes to face the foe.

The Mayor gave the next toast:—

"The Volunteers of Millbrook, Peterboro, Ashburnham and Lakefield; also our Guests, the Council of Port Hope and Harbour Commissioners."

Capt. Poole, again, as senior officer, was called to his feet, and in a short speech remarked that the Volunteers had thought themselves slighted, but this day showed that they were not. They were agreeably disappointed. He therefore, in behalf of the Volenteers, thanked the people, but especially the ladies, for what they had done in thus acknowledging the Volunteers, and their readiness to rally round the old banner. With the ladies engraven on it they would be able to face and brave every danger.

Capt. Kennedy also responded, thanking the ladies in behalf of his company. He had for 20 years belonged to the Volunteer force and now, as ever, he trusted he and his men were ready to do their duty.

Capt. Leigh, of Lakefield company, returned thanks for the honor done him and his company.

Lieut. Turner, of the Millbrook company, thanked the people of Peterboro' and the ladies for the kind manner the health of his company, as a part of the Volunteers, had been received and drunk; and Capt. Rogers for the Ashburnham Volunteers.

Mayor Craig, of Port Hope, on behalf of the Council of Port Hope, said he heartily thanked them for the manner in which the toast had been received. He felt honored and pleased in being present, and he was sure that he expressed the mind of all present.

N. Kirchoffer, Esq., as Harbor Commissioner, said he was exceedingly pleased to be present, as he always had pleasing remembrances of a short residence in Peterboro' about 30 years ago. Few could then foresee the future of Peterboro', its fine public buildings, store and dwellings are a credit to the place, and these and the present furnished would do honor to any town of 20,000 inhabitants. As one of the guests he thanked them for their being remembered in the toast.

Dr. Dewar on being called upon, said he would not have had to speak but for the omissions of both the Mayor and Mr. Kirchoffer. These gentlemen had spoken of the town and harbour, but forgot to thank the Peterboro' Volunteers for going out to defend the town and protect the harbour. He therefore had great pleasure in returning thanks for the kindness done to them to-day, but also for what they had done before in going to Port Hope. He also thanked the ladies for their kindness, and he knew, that if they were as good as the Volunteers they would be charming as well as beautiful.

Hon. Sidney Smith, although not a young man, could not forget the ladies, they had done the whole work, the whole enterprise to its completion had originated with them and they had done it in almost a few hours. They were Volunteers in the true sense of the word and their work to-day showed that they were not only beautiful but good. He, therefore, proposed

"The Ladies,"

Which was most rapturously received.

Lieut. H. Rogers responded for the ladies.

Rev. Mr. Clementi said he fully entered into the toast for the ladies, they had done much and deserved praise; but he would before parting propose the health of the chairman,

"The Mayor, for his conduct in the chair."

R. Denniston, Esq., would not forget a party who had done much to enable them to spend the day pleasantly, by giving the building in which they were assembled, by giving the Railroad system that Peterboro enjoyed, and by putting at their disposal a special train for the occasion. He, therefore, would propose the health of

"Mr. Covert, and the Railway interest of Port Hope and Peterboro,"

Which was drunk with eclat.

Hon. S. Smith, as Railroad Director, responded in behalf of Mr. Covert, as he had not been able to be present, owing to the excessive labours he had undergone in order to ensure a complete Railway system to Peterboro. He could say for Mr. Covert, that he was ever ready and willing to do everything he could for the pleasure and comfort of Peterboro.

The company then broke up to go to the races or other enjoyments, as each inclined.

THE RACES.

The races came off at 3 o'clock, or thereabout. There were but two races, the first a hurdle race, for which there were but three entries, viz:—

Garryowen,
White Stockings, and Brown Tom.

Won by White Stockings, owned by H. Uin Esq.

The second was a flat race, for which there also 3 entries, viz:—

Brown Bess,
Maggie Simpson, and
The Otonabee Maid.

This race was won by Brown Bess, Maggie Simpson getting lame.

The Physiog race did not come off, as was anticipated, as the riders did not appear in uniform, and consequently could not be allowed to enter for it.

FIRE WORKS.

The fire works next came off from 8 to 9 o'clock. This was under the management of the fire men and was well conducted.—The place being nicely lit up with various rockets, roman candles, revolving fire works and other displays. These being over the visitors proceeded to the station and left for their homes in good cheer. Every thing passed off quietly and pleasantly, every one being pleased with the day's fun, we hope also with themselves.

FIREMEN'S BANQUET.

After the fun and frolic of the day was over, the Firemen and a number of guests sat down to an excellent supper, prepared at the Huffman House. There were between 60 and 70 persons in all.

The vice chair was occupied by J. O'Donnell, Esq., surrounded by a number of Colonels, Doctors and others. Ample justice being done to the eatables, something to toast each other's health was introduced, and bumpers being filled, Captain McNaughton gave "The Queen", followed by "The Governor General", and "The Prince and Princess of Wales, and the rest of the Royal Family", which he introduced in a few very appropriate remarks. Song, "The English man", by Mr. Knapp, also an Irish song by Serg't Johnston of the Rifles. "The Army and Navy, coupled with the Canadian Volunteers", was given by the chairman. Captain Poole remarked that he was both a fireman and a Volunteer, and was proud to belong to both. He belonge to a branch of service which was an honor to any nation, and which stood foremost the world over, the army of Great Britain, and he trusted the Volunteers would never disgrace it.

Capt. Rogers, Ashburnham, was unusually happy in his remarks. He thought they had been slighted, but to-day showed how their labours were appreciated, especially by the ladies. The gentlemen very often slighted both the firemen and Volunteers, but if their property was on fire, or the feniens coming they got awakened. The ladies, however, deserved praise for their treatment of the Volunteers. He returned thanks on behalf of the Volunteers for the toasting of the Volunteer's health.

Col. Wigmore, of Dunmper, then made an eloquent speech, referring to the loyalty of the people of Dummer and of Douro long ago, and he knew they were so still; nothing could make them rebels.

Capt. Sutherland, in returning thanks, referred to what he had suffered for his country, having lost all he had but his shirt and drawers, near the Thousand Isles, in the troubles of '37 and '38. All this he had suffered from rebellion, but he was still loyal. He was sorry that Captains Poole and Kennedy had not been called to the front; he knew they wished to go and do their duty.

"The Mayor and Corporation of Peterborough," was then given, and responded to by Mayor Scott and Councillor Millar.

Mr. Ormond then proposed "Our Guests," Sheriff Hall, Mr. Dunnet, Lieut. Strickland, Mr. Edwards, and Dr. Poole responded.

Sheriff Hall, then proposed "Our Hosts."

Captain McNaughton responded, having himself honored in having our worthy Sheriff, the Military and other worthy citizens around him. He was also pleased.

Mr. Ormond next gave "The Corporation and Citizens of Ashburnham."

Capt. Sutherland responded eloquently, thanking the Firemen for their noble and generous efforts to save from fire property in Ashburnham as willingly as in Peterboro.

"The learned professions," was next given.

Mr. Scott and Dr. Kincaid responded.—Mr. Scott thinking that the Council should do something for the lawyers, Dr. Kincaid thinking that every fireman should obtain the hand of a lady and thus aid the doctors.

"The Press" came next, always last, although not least. The Examiner being alone said but little, as No. 2 insinuated encroachments on another day.

Dr. Kincaid then proposed the health of "Our Host", remarking that Peterboro' could boast of as good Hotels and accommodation as any town in the world, as travellers testified. This was warmly received, and drank with cheers, "Les ali disperses."

Thus ended the celebration of 1866, one of the best ever got up in Peterboro', and perhaps equal to any in the Province. May we add, long may Victoria reign to be thus remembered by every loyal subject.

A Flying Visit of the Mayor of Batavia and other Citizens of U. S.

Early this morning Hon. Sidney Smith received a telegram that the Mayor of Batavia and others were on the train for Peterboro. Their names were:—

Homer Bostwick, Mayor; J. Hoskill, Esq.; Jas. N. Otis, Esq.; H. Todd, Times newspaper: Tompkins, Esq., all of Batavia, N. Y.

These were met at the station and received by His Worship the Mayor and Councillor Millar, Sheriff Hall, Hon. S. Smith, D Sutherland, Esq., Capt. J. Kennedy, J O'Donnell, Esq. After taking them to see the river and cribs passing over the dams, they were taken to Caisse's where a lunch was provided and a few bottles of champagne disposed of, which made their hearts cheerful. At half past three they left on the train, highly pleased with their short visit.

Personal.

From the Gazette we find that at the examination at Kingston, before the Board of Officers appointed to examine Volunteer Militia Officers, Captain Edwin Poole, Peterboro' Rifles, obtained a first class certificate; Capt. P. also obtained a second class at the same time, there being but one examination. This certainly speaks much for his proficiency in drill, and is something that has seldom happened previous to his examination.

Lieut. H. Rogers, of the same company, also obtained a second class certificate, being all he sought at present.

Capt. Kennedy, of Peterboro' Infantry Company, also obtained a first class certificate at the same examination. It is highly creditable to Peterboro' that out of twelve from all parts who presented themselves for examination at Kingston only seven obtained certificates; and of the seven, three were from Peterboro'. All from Peterboro' obtained certificates. Peterboro' has some of the most efficient companies among Canadian Volunteers, and are as well officered as any in the Province, and as ready to move at their Country's call.

A Body found in the River.

On Sunday last, Mr. Johnston, who lives a little below the Locks, discovered a dead body floating in the water about a mile or so below the Locks. Information was given to Coroner Poole, and he forthwith held an inquest on the body. From information brought out at the inquest, it was believed to be the body of one Patrick Carmody, a shoemaker, who, it appears about 5 months ago, had been down visiting in Otonabee, and on leaving for home it is thought, instead of making his way by land, walked directly into the river and was not heard of since.

Fresh Importations.

We would call the attention of our readers to the "decided bargains" that are now being offered at A. Armstrong's, George Street, in the Dry Goods line. Mr. Armstrong has made large purchases in the best markets, of every variety of goods found in a Dry Goods Store, and he offers the whole at very small profits, and invites a call.—See his advertisement.

The present Issue has been delayed a day beyond its usual time through the desire to give particulars of the 24th; also from the hands being too much crowded with job work during the week. We hope this will be a sufficient excuse.

Jeff. Davis is to be tried, the trial commencing on the 4th of June. His health is rapidly failing.

A NEW EVENING PAPER.—The Evening Journal is the title of a new evening paper just commenced in Toronto. It is conservative in politics and professes to be liberal; but it will give the latest news of each day in addition to the political articles which may from time to time appear. There is room enough for political parties and their advocates, and we hope that our enterprising friend will meet with due reward for his labors. He has our best wishes for his success.

THE WEEKLY VISITOR.—This is the title of a Temperance Periodical published in Toronto. It is neatly printed, contains select temperance reading, and numbers several clergymen, of ability and education, as contributors. The motto of the Visitor is "Agitate, Agitate; Vigilance being the price of Liberty." The Visitor has a stupendous work before it, in which it will require skill, gence, faithfulness and patience, if it will succeed. It has our best wishes for all these temperance graces as well as for its final success.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK.—This very popular fashion book for June, is again on our table. The Steel Plate for this Month is "Christ and the Sisters of Bethany," and is very neat in execution and design. The Colored fashion Plate contains five figures of the new styles of summer dresses for the sea-side, evening and walking dresses, all brought down to the latest fashions. There is also a wood engraving of "Old Whitby." The Literary matter is equal to any previous number. Marion Harland, Mary Jasvis, S. Annie Frost, and others, constitute the staff of contributors to the Lady's Book.

The Lady's Book is $3.00 per annum. Back numbers can be supplied. Address, L. A. Godey, Philadelphia.

The Bible to be Re-translated.

The project of translating the Bible has been started by the minister of a Protestant church in France, and this it appears is endorsed by eminent men of the Protestant, Catholic and Jewish churches. The idea is to translate the Scripture without reference to either doctrinal creeds or ecclesiastical dominion, solely on philological and critical grounds, and then leave it to be received or rejected, interpreted or applied by individuals or churches according to the light of reason, or the impulse of the heart. The following is the course intended to be pursued:—

Our Society will approve of the translation of each of the books taken by itself, in the measure solely, of its philological and literary competence, leaving to the constituted authorities, the heart of the church, the liberty of adopting our work, and of adding to it their interpretations and their commentaries, of editing it, of setting their seal to it, if it please them, their imprimatur, according to the measure of their respective competence, from the dogmatic point of view.—But yet, it may be added, what will be the text which your Society will translate? Evidently, the original texts; for the Old Testament, the Hebrew text of which the Synagogue has preserved the depository; for the New Testament, the Greek text which the Apostles have bequeathed us, adopting the received text as a base, and utilizing the best variations. We must add, that these variations must not be allowed to produce mischievous divergencies, for, with very few exceptions, we can say of them, what Bossuet said of the differences which exist between the original Hebrew and the versions, 'They do not affect the rule of faith and morals.' We ask an understanding with men of good will, uniting on the common ground of philosophy and literary studies. Let the learned Hebrew and Greek scholars of the Institute of France, of the Sorbonne, of the Asiatic Society, assemble for the formation of an Academy of Translators; let them join to themselves the most competent men of learning and taste. The Society, which will have its seat at Paris, can receive the help of corresponding committees, founded in the provinces and in foreign countries. It will admit the discussion of all questions relative to the elucidation of the text, but its principal object will remain, the translation of the Bible.

It must be admitted that there are many difficulties to be encountered in carrying to a successful issue the end proposed; but if successful the work cannot fail to effect some good, if nothing more than the union of the different churches, in their work of translation and comparing texts. Another good may be effected, it the prepossessions and prejudices of those engaged in the work can be overcome, so that they may give the work, depending entirely on philological consideration for its meaning. We may expect that the new translation will do much to remove the numerous erroneous interpretations now given.

MONAGHAN TOWNSHIP COUNCIL.

Monaghan, May 19th, 1866.

The members of the Council met per adjournment as a Court of Revision. Mr. Robson in the chair.

Mr. Leonard did not appear. His name to be changed on the Assessment Roll from freeholder to executor.

On the motion of Mr. Dundas, the Assessment Roll, as revised, was finally passed.

The Council met afterwards for the discharge of business. All the members present. The Reeve in the chair.

Minutes of last meeting read and confirmed.

The petition of Arch Goodfellow and others, asking the sum of $10 towards repairing the road between the 9th and 10th concessions at Springville. Granted $8.00.

John H. Campbell's account amounting to $2.50, for blank book and stationery for his use as Assessor. An order was given on the Treasurer for the amount.

The Road and Bridge Committee gave in the following report:—

Having examined the bridge on the 11th con. at Foster's creek, we consider that the yearly accumulations of sticks and earth have filled up the north side of the culvert, and when the freshet came during the spring the water had no means of escape until it forced its way through the bridge. We consider that opening the channel on the north side, for the water to pass through and filling the hole in the bridge with stone and earth are all that are required at present to make it passable.

WILLIAM ROBSON.
JOHN DUNDASS.

On the motion of Mr. Collins, the sum of ten dollars was granted to be expended therein, under the superintendance of Councillor Dundass.

The following additional grants were made for roads:—

$5 dollars for loop line, and $25 for road round Wallis's hill.

On the motion of Mr Goodfellow seconded by Mr. Dundass, Councillors Collins and Robson were appointed a deputation to wait upon Mr. Wallis for the purpose of urging upon him the necessity of giving a deed for the road without delay, in order to enable the Pathmasters to proceed with their statute labour in the proper time.

The Reeve pointed out the urgent necessity which existed for passing a By-law providing for the health of the Municipality, stating circumstances which had come under his own notice, rendering it obligatory on the Council that immediate action should be taken thereon, in order that the health of adjacent localities might not be seriously endangered by their supineness. The suggestion was promptly acted upon, a stringent By-law introduced and finally passed, and Mr. Robinson Rutherford appointed Health Inspector to carry out its provisions.

Council adjourned to the 6th day of August, at ten o'clock a. m.

Collision and Loss of Life.

(From the Quebec Chronicle.)

It is our painful duty to regard the somewhat unusual occurence of a collision between two steamers on the river St. Lawrence, and loss of life is consequence.—The accident happened about three o'clock, yesterday morning, off Point Platen, opposite St. Croix. The regular passenger steamer Montreal, Captain Robt. Nelson, of the Richelieu Company's line, was on her downward trip to this port, when she came into collision with the St. Lawrence Towboat Company's steamer Hero, Capt. Chabot, then on her way to Montreal, having the bark Dardar, Cappen, master, from Marseilles, in tow.

When an examination of the fabric took place, immediately after the collision, it was found that the mate Noel Ladebauche, had been literally crushed to death as he lay sleeping in his berth, and his body jerked along the deck some distance, in the direction of the paddle box. It is exceedingly fortunate, under the circumstances, the loss of life was confined to one individual. The escape of one of the engineers who slept in the berth immediately beneath the mate was little short of miraculous. The shock of the collision caused so much injury to the machinery of the Hero as to prevent her from proceeding. Her master came down in the Montreal for the purpose of sending up assistance. Several of her crew were slightly injured.

MYSTERIOUS ESCAPE.—On Saturday morning last a most mysterious escape was made from the Brockville Gaol, which has caused considerable talk and no small wonder. Two weeks ago, it will be remembered, a person from Smithboi named Lewis, was arrested for passing bad coin, and after examination committed for trial. There was also in prison a man named John Brown, confined on a charge of assault, and between Saturday night and Sunday morning, while all the town was drowned in deep, including, it was supposed, the residents of the Gaol, the said Lewis and the man Brown made their escape and departed to parts unknown. The mystery is how the men managed to get out. How did bolts and bars fly asunder at their command? What "open sesame" secured them free egress? Were they watched and secured as they should have been. The bolts were unharmed, the locks unbroken, no violence seems to have been used. How then did the men get off?—Brockville Recorder.

ANTICIPATED WAR IN EUROPE.—The Leader says: Napoleon's speech at Auxerre is one of the strongest possible indications of war in Europe. Until the presentation of the address by the Mayor of that town, the Emperor had made no public statement which could have given rise to comment, much less to a general panic. It cannot be doubted that he made a tour in the provinces on occasion for making a public announcement such as has startled Europe no less than did his famous New Year's address to the Austrian ambassador which led to the Italian war of 1859.

A RACE ACROSS THE ATLANTIC.—The following is from the correspondence of the Western Daily Press, of Bristol, England:—"I give you the following account of an exciting race across the Atlantic between the National Steam Navigation Company's steamship Helvetia, Captain Ogilvie, and the Inman line mail steamship City of Baltimore, Captain McQuiggan. Both these vessels left New York on Saturday, the 7th April, at 12 noon, and were in company for five successive days, the Helvetia taking the lead. On the 12th, she left the City of Baltimore astern, and did not see her again until the morning of the 19th, off the Fastness, the Helvetia winning the race by arriving off Queenstown about one hour before the City of Baltimore."

The Nova Scotia House of Assembly has unanimously voted the sum of two thousand dollars to the widow of the lamented Dr. Slayter, who fell a victim to Cholera whilst employed in attending the sick passengers of the steamship England at the Quarantine station. The Provincial Secretary and Mr. Stewart Campbell passed high encomiums upon the bravery and heroism of the deceased, who lost his life while engaged in the humane work of endeavoring to alleviate the sufferings of his fellow men.

An extraordinary story about the escape of a nun, who had been for eleven years immured in a Limerick convent (having taken the "black veil,") is related in the Irish papers. The Cork Constitution says:—"Facts have been communicated to us which leave no doubt of the truth of the statement. She is only twenty-eight, but after eleven years' conventual immurement her hair is grey."

PROSPECTS OF WAR.—The complications in Europe seem unmistakeably to be leading to war, and possibly, ere this, the sword has been unsheathed. The situation is most critical, and the news that hostilities had actual y commenced would not by any means be surprising. It is to be feared that war in this case, if it do break out, will mean a disastrous European conflict, in which most of the Great Powers will be driven to take part.—Globe.

FIRE IN NEW YORK CITY.—A great fire lately occurred in New York. The loss of property was very great.

Teetotalism forbids a man touching anything that can intoxicate except a pretty girls lips, which you may taste after signing the pledge, providing you do so discreetly and with moderation, but the "Canadian Pain Destroyer" is highly recommended and is a sure cure for colds, rheumatism, pains in the side and back, tooth-ache, summer complaints, &c. PROF. VELPEAU,

Who is Prof Velpeau? He was a man of obscure birth, but he has given the world a Remedy for bald heads and grey hairs, that will make his name immortal. Hair Restoratives are multiplying on every hand, but the great desideratum is to find an article that will accomplish the purpose for which it is designed without a thick, unpleasant and offensive ointment.

Prof. Velpeau has discovered a method of dissolving the ingredients, and holding them in solution, so that there shall be no deposit, and yet without destroying the essential properties of any of the ingredients. It is pleasantly perfumed, may be used at any time, is a splendid hair dressing without oil, and absolutely prevents the hair from falling off or turning prematurely grey.

DARLEY'S

Arabian Heave Remedy and Condition Medicine

IS positively superior to any or all other preparations for the cure of Heaves, Coughs, Thick and Broken Wind, and all diseases which affect the Wind of Horses; also, as a Condition Medicine, surpassing everything of the kind; is easy to give, sure to cure, and safe in all cases and at all times, and does not prevent the horse from being worked while using it.

It cleanses the breathing apparatus, by removing from the air cells the coagulable lymph, or that secretion which in Heaves clogs them, causing a difficulty in breathing, and by its action on the diseased part causing the mucous membrane to resume its natural dimensions, thus equalizing the circulation of the blood, and restoring the enfeebled vessels to their natural size; by its use the horse's appetite is improved, all derangements of the digestive organs corrected, softening the skin, and giving to the coat a sleek and shining appearance.

Among the most important of modern Medical discoveries, stands

THE CANADIAN PAIN DESTROYER

As a Family Medicine, it is well and favorably known, relieving thousands from pains in the Side, Back and Head, Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Sprains, Bruises, Cramps in the Stomach, Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Bowel Complaints, Burns, Scalds, Frost-bites, &c. &c.

THE CANADIAN PAIN DESTROYER

Has now been before the Public for a length of time, and wherever used is well liked, never failing in a single instance to give permanent relief when timely used, and we have never known a single case of dissatisfaction, where the Directions have been properly followed, but on the contrary all are delighted with its operations, and speak in the highest terms of its Virtues and Magical effects.

We speak from experience in this matter, having tested it, thoroughly, and therefore those who are suffering from any of the complaints for which it is recommended may depend upon its being a Sovereign Remedy.

The astonishing efficacy of the Canadian Pain Destroyer, in curing the diseases for which it is recommended, and its wonderful success in soothing the tortuing pains of Rheumatism, and in relieving Nervous Affections, entitle it to a high rank in the list of remedies for these complaints. Testimonials coming in from Medicine Dealers, in all parts of the Country for further supplies, and each testifying as to the universal satisfaction it gives.

The Canadian Pain destroyer never fails to give immediate relief. All Medicine dealers keep it. Physicians order and use it; and no family will be without it after once trying it. Price only Twenty-five cents per Bottle.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any Cologne, used to bathe the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headache, &c. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and has obtained a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents,

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

"Joe' so?"—Exactly?—Solon Shingle said; they were there "every time." If he felt "awkley" in the morning, he took Plantation Bitters; if he felt weary at night, he took Plantation Bitters; if he lacked appetite, was weak, languid or unusually oppressed, he took Plantation Bitters; and they never failed to set him on his pins square and firm.

Few persons want any better authority; but as some may, just read the following:

" " " I owe much to you, for I verily believe the Plantation Bitters have saved my life.

REV. W. H. WAGONER, Madrid, N. Y."

" " " I have been a great sufferer from Dyspepsia, and had to abandon preaching. " " The Plantation Bitters have cured me

REV. C. A. MILLWOOD, New York City.

" " " I had lost all appetite—was so weak and emaciated I could hardly walk, and had a perfect dread of society. " " The Plantation Bitters have set me all right.

JAMES HEMINWAY, St. Louis, Mo."

" " " The Plantation Bitters have cured me of a derangement of the Kidneys and Urinary Organs, that distressed me for years. They act like a charm.

C. C. MOORE, 254 Broadway, N. Y."

Mrs. O. M. DEVOE, manager of the Union Home School for Soldiers' Children, says she "has given it to the weak and invalid children under her charge, with the most happy and gratifying results." We have received over a hundred scores of such certificates, but no advertisement is so effective as what people themselves say of a good article. Our fortune and our reputation is at stake. The original quality and high character of these goods will be sustained under every and all circumstances. They have already obtained a sale in every town, village, parish and hamlet among civilized nations. Base imitators try to come as near our name and style as they can, and because a good article cannot be sold as low as a poor one, they find some support from parties who do not care what they sell. Be on your guard. See our private stamp over the cork.

Over a Million Dollars Saved!

Gentleman:—"I had a negro man worth $1,200 who took cold from a bad hurt in the leg, and was useless for over a year. I had used everything I could hear of without benefit, until I tried the Mexican Mustang Liniment.—It soon effected a permanent cure."

J. L. DOWNING.

Montgomery, Ala., June 17, 1859.

"I take pleasure in recommending the Mexican Mustang Liniment as a valuable and indispensible article for Sprains, Sores, Scratches or Galls on Horses. Our men all say it acts like magic."

J. W. HEWITT,

Foreman for America, Wells, Fargo's and Harnden's Express.

"The Sprain of my daughters ankle, occasioned while skating last winter, was entirely cured in one week, after she commenced using your sale named Mustang Liniment.

ED. "SEELY."

Gloucester, Mass., Aug 1, 1865.

It is an admitted fact that the Mexican Mustang Liniment performs more cures in shorter time, on man and beast, than any article ever discovered. Families, livery-men and planters should always have it on hand. Quick and sure it certainly is. All genuine is wrapped in steel-plate engravings, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook Chemist, and the private U. S. stamp of Demas Barnes & Co. over the top.

An effort has been made to counterfeit it with a cheap stone plate label. Look closely!

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

It is a most delightful Hair Dressing.
It eradicates scurf and dandruff.
It keeps the hair rich, soft and glossy.
It prevents hair turning gray and falling off.
It restores hair upon prematurely bald heads.
This is just what Lyon's Kathairon will do. It is pretty—it is cheap—durable. It is liberally sold by the merchant, and yet its almost increasing, until there is hardly a country store that does not keep it, or a family that does not use it.

Who would not be beautiful? Who would not add to their beauty? What gives that marble purity and distingue appearance we observe upon the stage, and in the city belles? It is no longer a secret. They use Hagan's Magnolia Balm. Its continued use removes tan, freckles, pimples and roughness, from the face and hands, and leaves the complexion smooth, transparent, blooming and ravishing. Unlike many cosmetics, it contains no material injurious to the skin. Any Druggists will order it for you, if not on hand, at $1 per bottle.

Helmstreet's Inimitable Hair Coloring is not a dye. All instantaneous dyes are composed of lunar caustic, and more or less destroy the vitality and beauty of the hair. This is the original air Coloring, and has been growing in favor over twenty years. It restores gray hair to its original color by gradual absorption, in a most remarkable manner. It is also a beautiful hair dressing. Sold in two sizes—50 cents and $1—by all dealers.

A LIBERAL

Conservative Newspaper

A NEW VOLUME OF THE

Toronto Daily Evening Journal

[ESTABLISHED IN 1861.]

HAS REAPPEARED.

The "JOURNAL" was published for three years in Toronto as a Weekly, and for two years as a Daily Journal. Arrangements have been completed by which the Proprietor will be enabled to enlarge and otherwise improve it. It will, in future, contain the Morning and Evening Telegrams, Police Report of the same day, together with Editorials, Local, Canadian, American, and Foreign News, and Choice Literary Selections.

It is necessary that the Proprietor should have the hearty and earnest co-operation of his fellow citizens. The patronage of the enterprise, intelligence, and business of every community where newspapers are established. It is the part of true wisdom for a city to encourage all such enterprises as are calculated to sustain, advance or promote its welfare, its commerce, its intelligence, or its honour. Let no man think that by letting the public take care of itself he is not neglecting his own interests and his highest duty. The sacrifice or the part of friends and the public at large will not be great in order to triumphantly sustain the Evening Journal.

TO BUSINESS MEN.

The systematic way in which the paper has been circulated, together with the great advantages afforded to the business community by means of the "SPECIAL EDITIONS" that have frequently been issued, have obtained for the Evening Journal the reputation of being an excellent advertising medium; consequently, business men in this city and elsewhere have employed the greater part of the space for their announcements. Indeed, of an the advertising space has been so well filled that it has been impossible to accommodate very many Toronto business men, who have, from time to time, kindly expressed a willingness to advertise in the Journal

No expense has been spared or time lost in providing ways and means to place the paper in the position that the proprietor has been anxious to have it occupy

NEW TYPES, &c.,

Have been purchased to improve the typographical appearance of the Evening Journal. The length and width of the columns will be changed. Advertisements will now be condensed as much as possible so as to accommodate all City Advertisers, and the Public generally.

☞ Regular advertisers participate in the advantages of all the Special Editions of the paper, without any extra charge.

A plan has been adopted for having the paper circulated in all parts of the city, so that Advertisers may rest assured that their interests will be promoted.

ADVERTISING RATES.

A new feature has been introduced in connection with this paper, viz.: A Cheaper System of Advertising than has ever been offered to the Public.—Advertisements will be inserted for Seven Cents per line the first insertion, and two Cents per line for each subsequent insertion and if an advertiser can put all he has to say in ten lines, the charge will be only Fourteen Cents, and Four Cents for every additional insertion. Short Notices of Births, Deaths, Marriages, Houses to Let, Properties for Sale, Meetings, &c., of five lines or less, will be inserted for Fifteen Cents the first insertion, and Seven Cents for each subsequent insertion. All advertisements (with the exception enumerated) to be inserted for a short time, will be charged at the rate of Seven Cents per line first insertion, and Two Cents per line for every additional insertion. The privilege of Annual Advertisers is limited to their own business.

☞ Yearly Advertisements charged according to the space required. Business and Professional Cards (without change) will be inserted at Two Dollars per line by the year, when they contain six lines or less. Advertisements not accompanied by written directions will be inserted until forbid, and charged accordingly. Accounts with yearly advertisers will be settled monthly, unless otherwise arranged.

TERMS.

The "Evening Journal" will be reduced to One Cent per copy, Six Cents a week; or, Four Dollars per annum Mailed, or delivered by Carriers in any part of the City.

☞ A Local Story, entitled "A Reconstructed Husband," will be commenced in the First Number of the New Volume of the "Toronto Daily Evening Journal," and will be continued until finished.

TORONTO.

For the cure of

CHRONIC AND SECRET DISEASES!

And all Female Complaints.

UNFORTUNATE READ.

YOUNG MEN WHO ARE TROUBLED with weakness generally, caused by a bad habit in youth, which produces constitutional debility, you can rely on our remedies, for we have treated over fifty thousand patients, and we guarantee a perfect cure in all cases.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES.

Our PERIODICAL DROPS will bring on the monthly sickness in cases of obstruction from any cause, and after all other remedies of the kind have been tried in vain.

NEW REMEDIES AND QUICK CURES.—For Syphilis scientifically, seminal weakness, pains in the joints, all others of the kidneys, diseases of the head, throat, nose and skin, and all those dreadful affections arising from a secret habit of youth, which produces constitutional debility, renders marriage impossible, and in the end destroys both body and mind, the treatment we adopt is the result of upwards of 7 years experience and successful practice in Europe and America.

Their stock of goods, for variety and extent, we have scarcely seen paralleled

From the "Mirror of Fashion," March 1, 1865.

Messrs. Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, etc., opened on the 15th ult., and we venture to say that no finer display of goods was ever exhibited by any establishment in this city. The ladies thronged their honour almost to suffocation, although the streets were rendered nearly impassable by the melted snow and slush We predict for them a wonderful success.

From the "Ledger," February 28, 1865.

Our lady friends should visit the extensive establishment of Messrs. Devaugh & Co., No. 15 Maiden Lane, if they wish to indulge themselves with a sight which they will long remember. Such a profusion of elegant Watches Chains, Rings, Earrings, and, in short, of Jewelry of every name, kind and description, we never before witnessed. Their silver and plated ware is superb and almost casts into the shade the other splendid establishments which have long been the boast of our city. It is estimated that their stock is worth not less than one million of dollars.

How You Can Get a Prize.

Send Twenty-Five Cents to us, and as soon as we receive it we will mail you a Certificate, showing what you are entitled to. If the article or articles please you, send back the Certificate and One Dollar and we will forward you the article, no matter how costly it may be. If the article is not what you wish, state, when you send the Certificate and dollar, what other article of the same value you prefer and we will send it. If you wish more than one Certificate send us $1 and we will send five; for $2, eleven; for $5, thirty; for $10, sixty; for $15, one hundred.

Agents are wanted in the Army and in every place. We have an immense stock of goods to dispose of, and need a large number of Agents Our terms to Agents are very liberal and some even of our Lady Agents are making from $5 to $20 a day We give Agents 50 per cent. on all Certificates they sell provided they remit not less than $1 for eight.

GREAT IMPROVEMENT IN

SEWING MACHINES.

EMPIRE SHUTTLE MACHINE!

PATENTED FEB. 14th, 1860.

Salesrooms, { 536 Broadway, New York, / 252 Washington St., Boston.

THIS MACHINE is constructed on entirely new principles of mechanism, possessing many rare and valuable improvements, having been examined by the most profound experts, and pronounced to be

Simplicity and Perfection Combined.

It has a straight needle, perpendicular action, makes the lock or shuttle stitch, which will neither rip nor ravel, and is alike on both sides; performs perfect sewing on every description of material, from leather to the finest Sarsnet Muslin, with cotton, linen or silk thread, from the coarsest to the finest number, having neither CAM nor COGWHEEL, and the least possible friction, it runs as smooth as glass and is

Emphatically a Noiseless Machine.

It requires FIFTY PER CENT less power to drive it than any other Machine in the market. A girl twelve years of age can work it steadily, without fatigue or injury to health

Its strength and Wonderful Simplicity of construction renders it alm st impossible to get out of order, and is GUARANTEED by the Company to give entire satisfaction.

We respectfully invite all those who may desire to supply themselves with a superior article, to come and examine the Unrivalled Machine.

But in a more especial manner do we solicit the patronage of

Merchant Tailors,	Corset Makers,
Coach Makers,	Gaiter Fitters,
Hoop Skirt Manufacturers,	Shoe Binders,
Shirt and Bosom Makers.	Vest and Pantaloon Makers,
	Dress Makers.

Religious and Charitable Institution will be liberally dealt with.

One half-hour's instruction is sufficient to enable any person to work the Machine to their entire satisfaction.

Agents wanted for all Towns in the United States, where agents are not already established. Also for Cuba, Mexico, Central and South America, to whom a liberal discount will be given.

Terms invariably Cash on delivery.

PIANO-FORTES.

DERBY'S NEW PATENT.

ARE THE ONLY INSTRUMENTS constructed on a truly scientific principle. They have greater strength, and will remain longer in tune than any other Piano. The construction is simple and natural, all the extraneous lumber in the body of the instrument is dispensed with; the sound boards are merely two arched planks of thin wood, like the front and back of a violin; the strings are attached to a strong iron frame, which is separate and entirely independent of the case, thereby dispensing with the old heavy form of stringing by substituting straight bridges, preserving at the same time The Over Strung Bass, of which Mr Derby is the inventor. By these improvements we gain much more vibratory power, at the same time preserving all its purity and richness of tone.

They have received the highest testimonials from the Press, and all the principal artists in the country, among which are:

Harry Sanderson,	L. M. Gottschalk,
Max Maretzek,	S. Thalberg,
Theodore Eisfeld,	Wm. Mason,
Herman Wehlenknapp,	A. Bazill,
Francis H. Brown,	H. Rosenbecck,
Wm. Henry Fry,	Charles Pfeifel

Mr. EGREMUND THALBERG, the great pianist, says:—I have examined your new Piano-fortes and I cordially approve of its system of construction. Its principle, by which great increase of vibratory power is obtained, being very simple and perfectly philosophical. The tone is grand and noble; it has great capacity for sustaining the sound or singing, and its volume of tone or power I have never heard excelled in depth, purity and sympathetic sweetness.

Wm. HENRY FRY, late musical crit ic of the N. Y. Tribune says:—I have examined your newly invented Piano-Fortes They merit all the praise given to them by Messrs. Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strackosch, Mason and others. As regards the structure, they are original and philosophical; in purity, volume, and continuity of tone; in vocal verisimilitude, that overruling excellence which enables the pianist to "sing" on the instrument. Your Pianos deserve the highest rank. Your invention, in my opinion, is destined to work radical changes in the manufacture of Pianos throughout the world.

From the N. Y. Herald, Sept. 8—Upon a careful examination of Dunnes Piano-Forte, we find the results obtained are a very fine singing tone, great purity and brilliancy throughout the entire instrument, not often found in Pianos constructed upon the old plan.

The N. Y. Times, July 13, says:—We have now an instrument without an equal. It can sing with a smoothe delicacy, perfectly unattainable on any other instrument; an ordinary player obtains with no exertion, the fullness of a Grand Piano Forte and they must speedily supercede the old styles.

GENTLEMEN:—Having thoroughly examined and tested the Piano-Fortes invented and patented by Mr S. B. Dunnes, I am of the opinion that the tone resulting from his improvements, as exhibited in the instruments under examination, in point of richness, depth and brilliancy, equals that of the best Grand Piano-Fortes, and excells them in pure, musical and actual tone, power thus approximating closer to what I consider perfection in the instrument than has yet been achieved by any other system of manufacture.

Yours respectfully,
L. M. GOTTSCHALK.

The Daily Telegraph.

AT the present crisis of Provincial affairs, the publishers feel that there is room in the City of Toronto for an independent evening journal, which, without party scent, shall discuss dispassionately the important issues now occupying so large a share of public attention—journals fettered by political ties, and biassed by particular interests, are not free to present to their readers these issues in the broad and comprehensive manner which is now more than ever desirable. In addition to this, our readers generally desire more frequent supplies of information than the morning papers can give. To meet these desiderata the publication of THE DAILY TELEGRAPH is designed. Although attached to no political party,

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH

will give no uncertain sound upon public affairs Amongst other things, it will advocate:—

1 British Connection, strenuously opposing the formation of any political union with the neighbouring Republic.

2. Confederation of the British North American Provinces so soon as the full consent of the Maritime Provinces is obtained. This measure is imperatively required by the hostile commercial and political attitude of the United States government. It is, moreover, desirable as forming the germ of nationality which may be further developed in the future.

3. Free Trade, as far as is compatible with the necessities of the revenue; also, a renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty with our neighbors as soon as they are prepared to treat with us upon just and equitable terms.

4 The encouragement of Emigration and a more liberal management of the public Lands, so as to promote the opening up of our wast territory and its occupation by bona fide settlers

5 The Extension of Trade Relations with other British colonies and with foreign nations.

6 In British affairs moderate and judicious reform, but not violent organic change in a Democratic direction.

Other public questions, as they arise, will be dealt with in the same moderate and liberal spirit

During the approaching session of Parliament its proceedings will be duly reported, and at all times the latest intelligence received up to the time of going to press will be published

The Markets and matters of interest to commercial men will receive special attention in THE DAILY TELEGRAPH

Of all local matters of public importance, courts of law, school boards, public meetings, &c., &c., full and accurate reports will be given To the proceedings of the City Council special attention will be given and in corporation matters THE DAILY TELEGRAPH will, contrary to the present practice, give an unswerving support to those who faithfully serve the interests of the city, irrespective of party and political leanings

At the same time it will unsparingly expose all abuses and denounce all corruption, no matter who the guilty parties may be

The first number will be issued on the 21st May, neatly printed on good white paper, delivered to subscribers at the rate of $5 per year, payable in advance, or ten cents per week,—subscriptions by post, $4.50 per annum, invariably in advance.

THE SOLDIER'S FUNERAL.

The soft, sweet light of the setting sun
Over the solemn funeral train was shed;
Sad was the sound of the evening gun,
Of the muffled drum, and the solid's tread.

And slowly paced by the sable bier
The noble steed, that fond of home or
Per the field of death in his fierce career,
The warrior brave that from earth was gone.

They bore him away to his lonely tomb
With his helmet and plume on his coffin laid,
'Neath a blue sky, in a land of foes,
Where the spoiler's hand might have been stayed.

He wished to die on the battle-bed
With his sword so true in his daring hand,
And the stainless folds of his colours spread
O'er his lofty head in the ranger's land.

But the wish was vain, and he oft did pine
For his mother's smile and his sister's song
In the sacred square and the wheeling line,
'Mid the stately pomp of the warrior throng.

He did not dream that unwept, alone,
On a nameless spot by the wild sea wave,
No friend should pity his severed groan,
No mourner bend o'er his early grave.

Yet thus he died who had ever smiled
When the battle-cloud his red blade unbared,
And sported with death like a joyous child,
When the proud were low and the brave unspared.

Now he sleeps in peace on that distant shore,
And no more on his startled ear will come
The trumpet's note or the cannon's roar,
Or the warning bell of the mustering drum.

But his mother's heart—oh never more
Will peace or joy for his absence be given,
Till her ransomed spirit away shall soar,
And join the son of her love in heaven!

A Year After Marriage.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

CHAPTER III.

As day after day passed, and there was a studious avoidance on the part of both Mr. Lee and his young wife, of everything that could create in the bosom of the other an unkind thought, they were gradually restored to that condition of sunshine, mellowed, however, in a degree which had blessed the first two months of their married life. Truly and tenderly did they love each other, and fervently did they bless the kind Providence that had united them in the holy bonds of wedlock.

And yet, notwithstanding this, each was, at times, annoyed by little peculiarities of thinking or acting in the other, which did not harmonize with his or her ideas of fitness, propriety, or just order, originally entertained, and still held to be the standards. Sometimes these would provoke from one to the other a half serious word of rebuke or censure, which never fell kindly on the ear.

'I do not believe that you love me,' Fanny said one day, in a half petish tone, after Harvey had censured some trifling fable which had much better have been allowed to pass unnoticed; "for if you did, you would not always be finding fault with me, as you are.'

'But I am not always finding fault with you, Fanny.'

'Yes, you are though, always!' And the tears sprang to the young wife's eyes.

'I only said just now that I thought you sometimes spoke to persons abruptly. And I am sure that such is the appearance to me.'

'No one ever imagined such a thing but you. And I am sure, if you had felt toward me as a wife should be regarded you would never have imagined it either.'

Her tears now came rolling over Fanny's cheeks, for Harvey did not feel as kindly toward his wife just at that moment as he ought to have felt, and so these ten minutes had little impression on him.

'I do not think that you are at all justified in using such language toward me,' was his stern response.

'And I think that I am fully justified,' Fanny said, somewhat sharply. 'Ever since we have been married, it has seemed to give you especial delight to point out my faults and magnify them.'

There was truth in this, though in a greatly exaggerated form. And so Harvey felt it. The truth stung him, and the exaggeration of it made him angry and indignant. A cutting retort trembled on his tongue, but with a strong effort he restrained it, and compressed his lips tightly in the effort to keep silence.

Not another word uttered by either, although they sat together in the same room for nearly half an hour. At the end of that time, Fanny retired to her room, the husband went out and proceeded to his place of business.

'Sadly—sadly indeed, have I been mistaken in her!' was the ungenerous mental exclamation of Harvey as he left the house. Not unlike his own thought, was that of Fanny, though not suffered to come out into expression.

At the time the unhappy husband and wife met again, he with a sober face, and she with a deeply distressed countenance. No words passed between them during the meal. After it was over, he sat down with a book in his hand, and she with some fine sewing, and thus they spent the evening. A night's repose under the refreshing influence of sleep, produced a gentler and more reconciliatory state of mind. But neither felt called upon to make advances to the other or to offer concessions for conscience sake, and so the bickerings of the day before were added to the already serious accumulation of unforgiven, because unacknowledged, wrongs. Nevertheless, both strove to appear kind and forbearing, and both endeavoured to avoid any remark to act that might possibly offend. This was a hard matter, however, for as each could think of little else but the state of painful disconcordance of affection and confidence that existed, and as each excused self, and blamed the other, they were all the while in danger of saying something to set the fires into a blaze.

A few days sufficed to calm down all these ungenerous feelings and to permit the affection that each entertained for the other to have its true predominance. Then came the bright sunshine after the clouds and storms. If, while these seasons prevailed Harvey could have divorced himself to a hole to their previous misunderstandings, and have continued, as he felt willing to do, how far he esteemed himself at fault, Fanny would have met him in a like spirit of repentance and reconciliation. The result would have been most salutary in the resolution to bear and forbear which it would have caused each to take. But no unwilling was he, while the seasons of peace smiled upon him to mar their tranquil beauty, that he avoided, sedulously, any remark that could possibly bring up the past in review before their minds.

Thus they continued to pass along, week after week, and month after month, in alternative sunshine, shade and shower. And, as it was really lamentable, farther from a true appreciation of each other's better qualities of heart, than when first married. Yet, of all this, no one, no even Mrs. Goodman, Fanny's most sincere friend, had the most remote idea. All their acquaintances spoke of them as truly happy in the married state, and they, when speaking of each other, did so with respect and tenderness.

Affairs had gone on as described, for about seven or eight months, when Harvey said to his wife, one day, after dinner,—

'I have felt, all day as if I would like to see Celeste to-night. Will you go?'

'And I have been planning all the morning or us to go to the Chinese Museum this very evening, with Mr. and Mrs. Clarence, and two or three other friends.' Fanny replied, smiling good humouredly, altogether innocent of any desire to thus differently from her husband, or to prefer going anywhere but to the place he liked best. As she said, she had been thinking about the Chinese Museum, and had told Mrs. Clarence that she and her husband would, doubtless, join her little party in the proposed visit to the collection of oriental curiosities. Harvey felt a little hurt, as he usually did whenever Fanny seemed disinclined to fall in with, or to consult his wishes. Nor was he pleased at her prompt declaration of a wish to go to the Chinese Museum, when he had expressed a desire to visit the Theatre. He forced, however, a smile, and said,

'I think you will have to go with me this time, Fanny.'

But neither his smile, nor his pleasant tone could conceal from Fanny the fact that he wished her to deny herself for his gratification, not so much on account of his gift to see Celeste, as from a disposition to make her will passive where ever brought into opposition with his. A prudent and sensible wife would have instantly given way. For she would have been instinctively conscious that nothing of affection was to be gained by such a contest. She would have known, moreover, that her husband, if not a selfish and petty tyrant, never could have acted in mere opposition to her will, if that will had not, perhaps unconsciously to herself, been brought into direct collision with his will, and a determination to triumph exhibited. Fanny was not only conscious of this opposition of wills, but unwilling to yield. Not it seemed to her, from any wish to rule her husband but from an innate repugnance to being domineered over. Her reply to his remark was a repetition, with a slight change of his own words smilingly made.

'And I think you will have to go with me this time Harvey.' Harvey shook his head.

'You must go with me, Fanny.'

'No Harvey, you must go with me. Do now! For I am particularly desirous of joining Mrs. Clarence's party.'

To this appeal, Lee would have instantly yielded had it been made under almost any other circumstances, for it really gave him pleasure to consult her taste and wishes, when not set up pertinaciously and of seeming not at against his own. But he saw his purpose and instantly replied—

'And I am particularly desirous of going to see Celeste. So you must give up the Museum this time for my sake.'

'Must give up!' was Fanny's silent ejaculation, 'Must give up to his mere dictation? No, that I will not! I will be equal to, or bear no relation at all to my husband!'

'I think you will have to give up Celeste, Harvey,' was her reply. 'Mrs. Clarence will expect us, and I do not wish to disappoint her.'

'You can tell her that I had made up my mind, previously, to go and see Celeste to-night.'

'But I am not Harvey, and what is more, do not wish to go.'

'Well, I do then, and what is more, mean to go; so let that settle the matter!' Mr Lee spoke in a tone somewhat excited. His wife's instant response was—

'And I mean to go to the Museum, so let that set be the matter.'

'Fanny!'

'You needn't look and speak so sternly and authoritatively,' Mrs Lee said, returning her husband's fixed and half angry glances. 'If I am not my own and mean to guide my self I am not a mere automaton, with no thoughts, feelings or preferences of my own.'

She was going on to add more, but Harvey Lee picked up his hat and quickly left the house.

'And so it has come to this, already! I must be a passive slave to his will. This is the price that must be paid for his smiles and pleasant words. No—no—they are too dear at that sacrifice! I will not have them, if only to be gained on such terms.'

For all this, the woman was strong in the breast of Fanny, and she presently yielded to a gush of tears, sinking down upon a sofa, and weeping long and bitterly. To this, succeeded a calmer state. And then came the conflict between pride and self-will, and her instinctive perceptions of what was right, united with a strong affection for her husband. The former, however, steadily held dominion in her mind. He had arbitrarily, declared that he would do a thing not agreeable to her, at the very moment she was expressing disapprobation of it, and, evidently, with the determination of compelling her to do it also; and she had, in the face of this, declared her intention of doing another thing not agreeable to him. Thus stood matters, and must so stand so, until one party or the other gave way.

'It is out of the question; I cannot, and will not yield the point,' Fanny said, almost afraid after musing with oppressed feelings, for a long time over the difficulty in which they were involved. 'He would then consider me as a mere cipher, and so I should be, without any will of my own, and this I am not prepared to give up to any one, much less when the sacrifice is authoritatively demanded.'

In the very midst of this agitating struggle, her friend, Mrs. Woodman, called in. Much as Fanny desired, and for good reasons, too, to conceal from her jovial friend the aspect of affairs between herself and husband, her heart was too much troubled to enable her to assume a cheerful, unconcerned air, although she tried hard to do so.

'You do not seem very well, Fanny,' Mrs. Woodman said a short time after she had come in.

'I don't know,' was the evasive reply. 'I believe that I am as well as usual.'

'I should certainly say, judging from your looks, that you were laboring under pain either of mind or body.'

Mrs. Lee's eyes sank to the floor. Her feelings were too strong to permit her to venture a reply to this. A brief silence followed, which was broken by Mrs. Woodman, who said—

'Fanny, my dear child, it is too evident that you are suffering acute mental pain Let an old and sincere friend ask of you the reason of this. Your own heart will bear witness, that she has but one end in view in wishing to know the cause of your trouble—and that end is, that she may, if in her power, relieve it.'

'As the pain which I suffer is beyond your power to assuage, why should I speak of the cause?' Fanny replied in a voice that trembled perceptibly

'My sympathy will at least be something.'

'But I am not even sure of that,' the young wife said, half musingly, as if she were speaking to herself and not to another.

'Not sure of my sympathy!' ejaculated Mrs. Woodman, in surprise.

'That remark was not intended for you ear, although felt so strongly that it was spoken aloud,' Fanny said, the color deepening over her face.

'Why are you not sure of my sympathy?' Mrs. Woodman asked, in a serious tone.

'Indeed, Mrs Woodman, I would much rather be excused from speaking on this subject.'

'Your reluctance to speak of it Fanny, only to key me the more anxious to know the cause of your trouble. You are not altogether satisfied with yourself, I can easily see, and that convinces me that a large portion of your pain is self-inflicted.'

'I have no doubt but that you will think so, although I am of a different opinion,' was Fanny's reply to this remark.

'Why, then, do you imagine that I would think differently from yourself in regard to the cause of your trouble?'

'I have an idea that you would,' Fanny said, evasively.

'Do speak out plainly,' urged her friend.

But Mrs. Lee really loved her husband too well to complain of him to any one.—Her heart revolted against the very idea of speaking of him, even to Mrs. Woodman, censoriously; and, therefore, she steadily resisted every effort of her kind, judicious friend, whose counsel, just at that crisis, would have been to her invaluable, to probe the wound that rankled in her heart.

'And so you will not confide in me?' Mrs. Woodman said, at last.

'I do not feel that it would be right to confide my present uneasiness to any one' was the reply. 'It will soon pass away, I hope, like an April cloud from a sunny sky, and show all things brighter than before.'

'I sincerely hope so Fanny. And let me urge you, if there is anything in your power, to make large sacrifices for the sake of a truly quiet mind, remembering, that your unhappiness must always be shared, like your delights, by another.'

To this, which too plainly indicated Mrs. Woodman's suspicions, Fanny made no answer. After an hour's restraint, and indeed painful intercourse, the friend went away very much concerned. She suspected the cause of Mrs. Lee's unhappiness to be a spirit of opposition to her husband, who, as she had more than once noticed of late had begun to be less yielding to Fanny's requirements, and justly so, in her opinion. The good sense and affection of her young friend she had hoped, would promptly teach her a wife's duty, the more as it duly was presented; and it was for this reason that she had urged her so strongly to open frankly the ground of her trouble. But in this she had failed. But she resolved to visit her more frequently, and to become acquainted fully, if possible, with the true state of feeling that existed between the young couple.

CHAPTER IV.

'Come what will, that point shall never be yielded!' was the audibly expressed resolution of Harvey Lee, as he passed into the street, after both himself and wife had declared their determination to act differently from each other, instead of in concert. 'I have humored her whims, and given up to her too often and too long until her arbitrary, exacting, and overbearing spirit can no longer be endured. One of us must give way, that is plain. And shall I give up,—shall I come under a woman's dictation No! I should cease to be Harvey Lee were that to take place.

And then he walked on with hurried steps, writing upon the tablet of his mind, still more bitter things against the wife of his bosom, who truly loved him, and who did not, really, desire to rule, but only resisted what she plainly considered his disposition to make her give up all to him.

All through the afternoon, his mind remained unchanged, and when he turned his steps homeward, it was with a stern feeling of determination to carry matters through at all hazards.

'One or other must give way,' he said, as he drew near to his dwelling. 'It cannot be me—that is settled. If Fanny will go with me to the Theatre, well and good; if not, I shall go alone, and she can go where she pleases.'

As for Fanny, a feeling of regret would steal insensibly over her mind, at having, foolishly and hastily, declared her intention to go to the Museum, after her husband had avowed his determination to visit the Theatre. She had said it, however, and the words could not now be recalled, nor could she gain her full consent to let them go as idle sounds. Hoping that her husband would yield the point, she yet could not herself give it up.

When he came in he did not speak to her as usual, in the chamber, but seated himself in the parlor below, with a book in his hand and there awaited the supper bell. Fanny's ear noted his entrance, and she remained long in expectation of hearing the sound of his footsteps on the stairs. But she waited in vain. This evident indication that the angry feelings with which he had parted from her, still remained, fanned into a flame the declining fires of her own bosom. She would not, therefore, descend—nor would he ascend, while both gave to the act of the other the worst construction.

The tea bell at last rung, and the two once more met. Half glancing at each other as they entered the dining-room together, they seated themselves at the table in silence. No words passed between them at the meal, which was eaten by compulsion, to seem as far as possible unaffected by the discord that reigned between them.

'Are you going with me to the Theatre, Fanny?' Mr. Lee said as he arose from the table.

If there had been any thing of affection in his voice—if he had smiled, and seemed indifferent about the matter—Fanny would have at once given up, and said yes, cheerfully and gladly. But his tones were cold, half authoritative, and his eye somewhat threatening in its expression.

'No, I am not,' was the instant and firm reply.

'Then you can go where you please! I am going to the Theatre,' he said angrily.

'But you will repent this, madam!'

'I should repent becoming the more slave of your dictation, still more!' was Fanny's response, made in a voice as angry and repulsive as that used by her husband.

Lee did not pause to handy words with his wife, but instantly turned away, took his hat, and left the house.

In the parlors of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence neighbors and friends of Fanny and her husband, were assembled, at the time Harvey left his house, to attend, alone, the Theatre, a pleasant little party of some one or ten ladies and gentlemen awaiting the appearance of Mr. and Mrs. Lee, to go with them to visit the Chinese Collection.

'Mr. and Mrs. Lee are late,' remarked one of the company, more impatient than the rest.

'Here is Mrs. Lee now' Mrs Clarence said, a moment after, as that lady entered alone, with a face bright with pleasant smiles.

'Where is your husband?' asked Mr. Clarence, seeing that he had not come in with her.

'I am very sorry that he could not go with us,' was her reply, smiling still more pleasantly as she offered her apology.—'But, unknown to me, he had made an engagement with some friends to go and see Celeste to night. He would not break that engagement, nor would he hear to my breaking mine, and so we have divided for once, for the sake of our friends. Are we not an accommodating couple?'

'Very, indeed!' was the laughing response.

And then the company, that had only been waiting for Fanny and her husband, passed from the house to visit the Museum, in the pleasantest humor imaginable. Mrs. Lee walked with Mr. and Mrs. Clarence, chatted all the way in a lively, agreeable manner. No one would have imagined that even the dimmest shadow veiled her heart.

At the Museum, none seemed to take more delight in examining and commenting on the various curiosities in that vast and wonderful collection, than she. Nothing seemed to escape her eye, nor its use, as explained, her apprehension.

'Beautiful! Wonderful!' were exclamations made by her at every turn.

'I only wish that your husband were along to enjoy this rare exhibition with you, Fanny,' Mrs. Clarence said, once during the evening.

'So do I,' was her response. 'But what can't be helped, you know, should never rob us of rational delight. The fact is, I am going to make his absence a source of new pleasure. I shall picture it all to his mind, and enjoy his admiration of it more than my own.'

'You are truly a rare philosopher,' Mr. Clarence said, smiling at Fanny's pleasant idea. 'With such an extractor of good out of every event, as you seem to be, for his companion, your husband must be blest indeed.'

'Rather say that I am blest in being united to one who can appreciate my feelings, and who is willing to enter into and partake of my efforts to give him pleasure. It is more blessed, you know, to give than to receive.'

'On that point we shall certainly not quarrel, Mrs. Lee,' was Mrs. Clarence's laughing reply. 'Only do you tell Harvey, for me, that I think him a very happy man.

THE MARITIME PROVINCES.

At the present time these provinces are agitated with a new election, in which confederation and anti-confederation are the leading principles. There can be no doubt but that confederation is likely to prevail. Already several constituencies have returned confederation candidates, and the gains are on that side. The anti confederates are becoming weaker and weaker day by day. These elections will soon be over, and when ever parliament will meet in a few days the provinces may nearly fall be in a position to unite in sending delegates to London to settle the great question. We however, do not expect all we individually desire.—The minority will have to yield to the majority in these matters. Let us hope that the changes will not be the means of selling or altering those principles, or destroying those liberties and rights which we here-to-fore enjoyed. If the rights of the people are not duly recognized and provided for, no new scheme, however concocted or effected, will ward off discontentment, and this very often creates troubles not before thought of. Confederation, abstractedly considered, cannot be all that Canadians look for, but a confederation that will ensure to every portion of the country equal rights and just laws. We are rather listless at the present. The only word we hear of is Confederation, not a word about the terms. Leave all to the 'clique;' these conduct their business in secret, nothing is known until men are pledged to support their deliberations, and even then as little as possible is allowed to ooze out. Canadians must have a great deal of confidence in the ministry, or confederation is a boon that must be bought at any price. We do not say oppose it; on the contrary, let us have union, but let not that union be at the price of giving up the elective principles in the Council, or the right to deal with every matter of local interest, and that concerns all alike, as we are, and in whatever position we may be, namely, the right of dealing with the great subject of education. If the Legislative Council be appointed instead of elected, the Country will be cursed by a set of useless old partizans, ready to do evil as fast as good, at the fiat of a demagogue, while, if the subject of education be settled now for the whole provinces, we will be cursed with the effete notion of some one perhaps not well qualified to recommend.

WAR CLOUDS OVER EUROPE.

Every mail brings fresh intelligence of the probabilities of a European war. Prussia, Austria, and Italy are likely to be the contending parties, of which Prussia and Italy appear to be against Austria. These powers are arming and placing their troops already. No blow has been yet struck, but as Napoleon is said to be secretly fanning the flame, no one knows how soon it may burst out. Prussia and Italy are considered the cats paws in the hands of their more wiley adviser, with the intent of dismembering Austria and increasing Prussia, Italy and France. There were rumors of a Congress to settle the difficulty, and if possible maintain peace; but there are doubts of the possibility of arranging the trouble without blood. England has not yet offered her services in any prominent manner, believing that they would not be acceptable and, therefore, wisely determining to keep out of the affray.

Napoleon III receives the blame of being the planner and promoter of the present state of affairs with the intent of breaking up the terms of the treaty which settled the affairs of Europe after the defeat of his uncle—but when the war may end, wiser heads than even his may not be able to opine.—The end may not be yet. One thing is certain the commotion in Europe is very great.

FENIANISM.

This game is about played out. Stephens has not yet been able to conciliate contending parties, nor is it likely that he shall for a long time. He promises to lay the whole matter before the Irish people, and abide by the decision. If they say strike at Canada, he will do it, but if they say the battle must be fought in Ireland, he is ready to sacrifice comfort, wealth and life for Ireland. The fact is, that he does not know what to do. An empty treasury, disunion, a bad cause, and absence of courage to commence, and without hope of success in the future, forbid immediate action—better to wait till the Treasury is replenished. Still arms are being purchased and distributed. About a week since 81 boxes of arms were seized by the U. S. authorities. Threats, of course, will now and then be heard for a while longer. They cannot die so easy as not to give another struggle, but they are so weak the death struggle will hardly be noticed.

A Strange Visitor.

On Monday morning, a well-to-do farmer in Smith heard a rap at his door at a very early hour, and arose and opened the door, when one dressed in female attire pushed in to the old man a bundle of what appeared to be clothing, saying that it was for some one inside, and immediately left, as if in a hurry. The bundle, however, on being moved exhibited evident signs of containing life, and on closer observation was found to contain a lately born infant. The recipient has constable Arnott on the track, and there are strong probabilities that Mr. Arnott has found a mother for the stranger. Matters have not yet been fully cleared.

Notes of the Lecture on Cholera.

BY THE REV. J. S. DOUGLAS, A. M., M. D.

The Lecturer said:—"Cholera is certainly coming. Ships attacked by it while passing through the current of air in which it was carried in their crowded state, render their passengers more easily attacked. The air, like the water of the sea, moves in circles, and so advances slowly in the direct line. Yet surely will it come during summer to our towns, and spread from these centres to the country during this or following summer, and hence the folly of shutting our eyes, like the bird of the desert, in the hope of escaping. Two fears—before and after—fear beforehand and prepare; fear after and regret. Let us therefore fear now, and so never need to fear afterward."

He further stated that his "object was to show what cholera is and then we will not be alarmed at mere shadows. Not mere diarrhœa or dysentery, which constitute British cholera, and hence the remedies commonly recommended—laudanum, rhubarb, opium, pepper and brandy, &c.—all useful enough in their way to stay diarrhœa and so stop fear, but not adapted to cholera.—Cholera, like fever and ague, comes from great swamps of Asia, lingers in swampy places, and attacks those who are in a depressed state of health, from bad air, bad food, bad drink, as bad water, &c. It comes on with uneasiness and speedily turns the patient blue, and so runs on to collapse and blackness. Diarrhœa may precede or accompany it, and this may arise from indigestible food, or from food too easily digested; or, worst of all, from constipation, when the system gives way. Hence the mistake about prohibiting fresh pork, fresh veal, fresh vegetables, &c., whereas these are most useful to health, if not in excess. People should regulate their diet so as to keep the body easy, as sickly persons are less in danger than healthy, because like Paddy's shoe—easy in, easy out. Beware of strong medicines, though recommended, which unskilfully used, may kill instead of curing. Use simple remedies, and if possible get skilled advice, being cheaper in the end. One comfort now obtained—cholera though infectious as carried through the air, is not caught from contact, till the death smell comes, and no more then perhaps than any other disease if care be taken. It is not right needlessly to expose oneself; yet do not fear to do duty. The terror that kills is not common cowardice; it is a sinking of the nervous system in consequence of general depression. Therefore, if possible, avoid unnecessary alarm. You have heard what is cholera, and also heard that mere diarrhœa or dysentry is not cholera. Most that die, die from terror—which squeezes the blood from the vessels. In this respect the ancient plague and the modern cholera are the same, the one passing outward and the other inward. No use saying don't be afraid. Can't help falling when there is nothing to hold one up; therefore, make your peace with God and their is no cause for fear. Religious men make the bravest soldiers, so faith will be found the best shield for the body as well as for the soul. Stand prepared to die, and then if you die, you will find the gain, and also much more likely to survive.—Trust in God, and use all due precautions as to cleanliness, food, drink, &c."

The lecturer then said that he intended to ask a collection for the Sabbath School-room he built here for the public benefit, with public money. But as so few were present and none that he could ask to take up the collection, he would defer his intention in this respect. Only he trusted that the people of Peterboro who built the school room for the public benefit will never suffer it to be perverted to any other use. In conclusion he said, let me urge you to seek the mercy of God, by breaking off your sins with righteousness, and by showing mercy to the poor, in which I am glad to say the people of Peterborough come behind no town in the Province.

The Rev. gentleman then concluded by thanking the chairman and audience for their kind attention.

A STORM.—The people of Rochester and vicinity were lately visited with a storm of wind, hail, rain and lightning that did much hurt to everything exposed. The hail, some of which were as large as hen's eggs riddled windows, cut down plants, and destroyed nurseries. $100,000 would not cover the damages. The circle of the storm scarcely exceeded five miles. Many were hurt, but none killed; men were blown to the ground, and some received broken arms. Ladies were forced to prostrate themselves on the ground to escape the fury of the storm; the horses at funerals ran away with freight, but fortunately no one was hurt, although there were narrow escapes.

A SHOCKING ACCIDENT AT GALT.—While a squad of gunners were engaged in firing a Royal salute, using a Russian gun for the occasion, they had only fired three shots, when in driving in the fourth shot, the wadding ignited and caused a discharge of the gun, the rammer being in it. Two men, James Armstrong and William Bogue, who were loading the gun, were sadly mutilated, and both died immediately. The two others were severely wounded, one had his thumb blown off, another had his face injured.

THE TWO DAYS' DRILL TO BE ABOLISHED.—We understand that the Government have decided to dispense with the two days' drill each week, now required of the Volunteer force of the country. This information will be most cordially welcomed by the Volunteers, especially by those in the rural districts, whose time and attendance are now demanded by their agricultural pursuits.

The Spaniards have been defeated in an attack on Callao. It does appear as if this power was determined on her own destruction. One of the most imbecile of the old States, already robbed of her finest Colonies, unable to protect herself at home, she seeks war with many of those colonies, the result of which will be her own ruin.

The Hon. John Hilliard Cameron, Grand Master of the Canadian Orangemen, attended the Fenian demonstration to Stephens in Jones' Wood, N. Y., a few days ago, and although recognized by several of the Brotherhood was not molested.

Mr. Lincoln's tragic death was a source of some expense to the nation. Congress has just voted $300,000 for the expenses of the late President's funeral, and $100,000 for the purchase of Ford's theatre.

General Scott, of Mexican notoriety, died on the 29th instant, at West Port, aged 80 years on the 13th of June.

THE BEE.—This is the title of a spicy little sheet now published in Ottawa. As its name implies, it is supposed to be armed with a proboscis, keen, penetrating and annoying, if aroused, and whether it will prove a drone, a worker or a queen yet remains to be seen. Many such visitors have been short lived indeed; they do not appear to take root in Canadian soil. Let us hope that either the Bee or the Gridiron, or both, may suit the soil and climate, and prosper. Let the Bee go on and make honey during the summer.

THE GRIDIRON.—This is the name of a neat little periodical just commenced in Toronto. Its professed object is to expose the foibles of weak minds, exhibit the lower propensities of human nature for their eradication, and afford a little fun, and perhaps administer sarcasm to those who need it. The Gridiron promises that its dishes will be juicy, easy of digestion, and generally not delicious, excellent remedies for head ache, heart ache and (except the tooth ache) all kinds of aches. Let us hope that the promise will be verified, and the prescriptions effectual. The Gridiron costs only 5 cents a number, or $1.50 a year. We wish it prosperity.

THE LADY'S FRIEND FOR JUNE.—This superior magazine leads off with a suggestive steel plate called, "The Mother's Blessing," illustrating a romantic story. The fashions are distinguished as usual for elegance and appropriateness. Airily graceful and delicately gay, they befit the month of roses, of summer skies and soft south winds. "The Music Mistress," a good wood-cut, also illustrates a story. Then follow some well chosen designs which the ladies will find useful, a Gored Dress, an Oriental Braiding Pattern, The Spanish Fichu, Grecian Coiffure, fashionable caps and bonnets. "The Old Family Clock," occupies the musical pages.—Among the stories, "Which of the Two," is remarkably good, even for the genius and practised pen of Louise Chandler Moulton; "Strategy," by Emma B. Ripley, is excellent, and so is "A New But on an Old Stalk," by Frances Lee; and "Sybil Ainsworth," a continued story by Harris Byrne; "The Amber Spirit," is a short and striking article, with a quaint illustration. The poetry is by August Bell, E. Margaret Starr, and others. In conclusion are some picturesque bathing dresses, the usual attractive variety in the work table department, Editorials, Receipts, and Fashions.

TOWN COUNCIL.

Monday, May 28, 1866.

The Council met according to adjournment.

Present—His Worship the Mayor; Messrs Ormond Toole, Millar, Wilson, Hamilton, Cox Wrighton, Doherty.

The minutes of previous meeting were read over and confirmed.

A communication from W. N. Kennedy, applying for the office of collector, was read.

A petition from Robert Gorman was read, asking aid to get to the hospital at Toronto.

His Worship the Mayor, was instructed to make some enquiries, and if found necessary to grant him some assistance.

Accounts from A. Jackson for wood, $16 50; also from Tobias Fitzgerald mending engine $5.00, were referred to the committee on Finance.

Mr. Stevenson, as chairman of the Street and Bridge committee, submitted a report on the intended improvements to be made in the several wards.

On motion of Mr. Toole, seconded by Mr. Wilson,—The Council went into Committee of the whole on the subject of the report—Mr. Wrighton in the chair.

The report was read and passed, when the committee rose, and the chairman reported the report read in committee without amendment.

We regret that we did not get the report in time to give the whole. The following is recommended therein:—

That about $50 be spent on Murray street; about $30 on the bridge on Bethune street; $12 on the side walk north of Brock; $6 on the corner of McDonald and Bethune street; $50 to gravel Read street; $5 to mend bridge at Hamilton's foundry; to repair side walk on Brock street, between bridge and Aylmer street and Presbyterian Church, $15; to gravel west end of Hunter street, $20; to grade Read street, between Simcoe and Hunter, $20; to repair street north of Captain Rubidge's, $10; to repair side walk on Simcoe street, between Aylmer and Rubidge streets, $10; to lay a new side walk between Rose's Hotel and Lemay's platform, George street, $35; to repair side walk from George street to Tanner's Cabinet Shop; to grade the street from between Hunter and Brock streets, south of the Mayor's residence, $60; to grade Water street, between London and McDonald streets, $10; to lay a side walk on Water street, between Brock and Murray streets, $40; to lay a side walk on Harvey street; to repair side walk on Water street, from Chambers to Simcoe street, with crossing to Bank of Montreal, $40; to lay a side walk from Captain Rubidge's to Charlotte street, $40; to lay a side walk from E. Burnham's office to Phelan's, $30; to gravel Charlotte street, from Railroad to Bridge at English's, $40; to repair side walk from George street to Railway crossing, $30; to lay a new side walk on north side Sherbrooke street, between George and Aylmer streets, 4 planks wide, $120.

On motion of Mr. Stevenson, seconded by Mr. Ormond,—The Council went into committee of the whole, Mr. Hamilton in the chair, on the second reading of the By-law for appointing a collector for the current year.

The By-law was read a second time, and the blanks filled up with the name of David Carlyle, when the committee rose and reported the By-law read in committee a second time without amendment.

Moved by Mr. Stevenson, seconded by Mr. Ormond,—That the By-law appointing a collector for the current year, be now read a third time and passed; and that the Mayor and Clerk do sign the same, and attach the corporate seal.

The By-law was read a third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Cox, the Treasurer was instructed to pay the license and health inspectors their quarter's salary, due 1st June proximo.

On motion of Mr. Toole, seconded by Mr. Wrighton,—The Street and Bridge Committee was authorised to raise the necessary amount of money from any of the banks, and that the Council indemnify them for so doing, and will provide for the same on the Collector's roll for the present year.

The Council adjourned for two weeks.

Madame Anna Bishop has given six concerts at Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, the last one was patronized by his Majesty King Kamehamcha.—Madame Bishop and Mr. Charles Lascelles, left the island in the steamer Ajax on the 14th of February last, for San Francisco. She is on her way to Australia.

Municipality of Burleigh, &c.

The Court of Revision for the Municipality of the united townships of Burleigh, Anstruther, Chandos, Cardiff, Monmouth, Harcourt and Bruton was held this 8th day of May, 1866.

All the members present.

Mr. C. Sousley, chairman.

Notices of appeal were read from the following parties, viz:—Messrs. A. H. Campbell & Co., W. Myers, H. Maxwell and the Canadian Land and Emigration Co. On their being called, no one appeared for them therefore, no action was taken.

Moved by Mr. Carroll, seconded by Mr. Castiday, That the Canadian Land and Emigration Co. be allowed to commute for the statute labor chargeable against their lands in the townships of Harcourt and Bruton on the aggregate assessment of said lands for the year 1865.

Moved by Mr. Stone, seconded by Mr. Scott, That lots No. 33 in the 2nd and 3rd concession of Anstruther, assessed to Mr. C. J. Vizard be struck off the roll.

Moved by Mr. Castiday, seconded by Mr. Stone, That lots No. 11 and 12 in the 5th concession of Anstruther, assessed to Mr. A. Hagill be struck off the roll.

Moved by Mr. Carroll, seconded by Mr. Scott, That Mr. F. Mooney be assessed for lot 35 in the 4th concession of Anstruther, as owner, and Mr W. Crow as occupant of said lot instead of Mr. Jonah Hagill.

Moved by Mr. Castiday, seconded by Mr. Stone, That lot 19 in the 12th concession in the Northern Division of Burleigh be placed on the assessment roll and assessed to John McClemoyles.

Moved by Mr. Stone, seconded by Mr. Carroll, That lot 14 in the 5th concession of Cardiff be placed on the assessment roll and assessed to Wheeler Armstrong.

Moved by Mr. Castiday, seconded by Mr. Scott, That lot No. 2 in the 7th concession of Chandos be placed on the assessment roll and assessed to Thomas Bulleid.

The Court rose and reported on the assessment roll with several amendments.

Moved by Mr. Scott, seconded by Mr. Stone, That the assessment roll, as amended be now adopted and be considered the revised assessment roll for this Municipality for the year 1866.

The Council met according to notice.

All the members present.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

Moved by Mr. Castiday, seconded by Mr. Sousley, That Mr. Carroll be authorised to enter proceedings forthwith against all parties who have cut timber on the road allowances of this Municipality and who have not yet paid for such timber.

Moved by Mr. Sousley, seconded by Mr. Scott, That an amendment be made to amend sections No. 1 and 6 of By-law No. 4.

Moved by Mr. Castiday, seconded by Mr. Stone, That this Council do now adjourn until called together by the Reeve.

(For the Examiner.)

Mr. Editor you will much oblige by giving the following scrap a place in your next issue.

Yours truly,

C.

Christian Inconsistency.

Much has been said about the duty of Ministers of the Gospel to preach the great doctrines of the Gospel of Christ, and to apply them pungently to the consciences of their hearers. But do the members of Churches realise that they in a great measure are the means of either retarding or assisting (by their daily walk and conversation) the success of their preaching on the hearts and consciences of unbelievers and others? Christians are declared in the Scriptures of Truth to be a "peculiar people," "hidden ones," "saints," &c.—Such are their designations, as given in the Bible, and such were they considered to be by the worldling and unbeliever in other times when a profession was real, as it is with many professors in our day, only a name. In our days the toilet is more attended to than the duty of prayer. Fashion is the reigning deity everywhere; and in the Theatre, Circus, Race Course, &c., where vice is rampant, the professing christian is to be found in intimate fellowship with the scoffer and unbeliever. "Be not conformed to this world" is an injunction of Scripture. Surely modern professors do not understand this passage, or we would not find a copying of superiors in dress and carriage in the churches and out of it, and a perpetual exhibition of "high life below stairs." Addison's story from the spectator of the "Emmets and the Mole Hill," should be printed in large characters and placed at the corners of our streets and in our churches for the special use of the professors of our day.—The dissipation and profligacy of our public men are alarming. Our chief magistrate is charged with being heated with wine, so as to disgrace the country and imperil its best interests by his debauchery. Sandsbury sits in solemn drunkenness in the senate chamber, and McDougal disgraces the senate by staggering on the street; and we are told of cabinet officers roistering over their cups, and spending their midnight hours amid the fumes of their inebriety. Yet tell it not in Gath, 'twas the votes of Christian men that hoisted them into office. God has evidently a controversy with us, he is angry with us, and why not? Brandy, cards, French fashions, race course and theatrical amusements, &c., rule and govern everywhere.—Pittsburg Covenanter.

Scene in the Senate of the U. S. after taking the Vote on the "Civil Rights Bill."

The scene in the Senate on finding at the close of the great debate on the "Civil Rights Bill," was one never to be forgotten. The vast assembly seemed to be thoroughly aroused. Eminent and earnest men from all parts of the country looked down from the galleries with intense interest. Tilton gazed from the reporter's gallery like one entranced. Members of the House of Representatives, hats in hand, take their places behind the Senators' desks. The entire area of th Senate floor is filled with men, earnest solemn and determined. Their presence said plainer than words, "Senators we represent the people; beware how you misrepresent them!"

The names of the Senators were called, and the reply of each seemed to convey, not only some idea of the character and style of the man, but to intimate, not obscurely, the dominant feeling of the movement. Instantaneous applause from floor and galleries greeted the faintly spoken "Aye" of Senator Morgan, from N. Y., showing what joy there is over one gets back again to the path of duty. The now meek Senator felt it more as a rebuke than a reproval, his countenance saying plainly enough "what have I done to merit applause?" He was to be pitied rather than envied.

When the President of the Senate, overjoyed at the great victory, and forgetting that the bill had yet to pass the Lower House, declared "That the bill having passed by the requisite majority had become a law—the veto of the President notwithstanding." The applause was truly sublime. Not content with ordinary expressions of approval, there was a general shaking of hands, and varied exclamations of joy and triumph in every part of the chamber. Tall John Wentworth, of Illinois, head and shoulders above the people, his head trimmed beaver high in the air, or rather thrown up at every step as he moved to and fro upon the floor of the Senate House. Washburne, strong, and conscious of his strength, with face of bronze and nerve of steel—the great Northwest at his back and rebellion at his feet, —administering pardon and absolution to the erring last greatest Senator from New York, by laying his hand approvingly upon the shoulders of this now meek and dutiful servant of a loyal people.

The joy of the coloured people at this great and crowning victory is scarcely less than that they experienced at the emancipation proclamation, or the constitutional amendment. In a manner alike creditable to their feelings and their good taste, the coloured people of the capital left upon the desk of each Senator who voted for the "Civil Rights Bill" a bouquet of forest flowers, with a card, upon which was written the words, "We exercise the Civil Right to express our gratitude to our friends."—Not the coloured people only, but the whole country owes a debt of gratitude to the moral heroes of the present Congress, who in the hour of the nation's peril stood firm amid the howl of resuscitated rebels and the storm of executive fury, and achieved a victory scarcely less glorious than any yet obtained over armed rebels on the field of battle.—Pittsburgh Covenanter.

Dreadful Steamboat Explosion in Montreal.

About half past four yesterday afternoon a small steamer named the Lion, built during the winter in one of the yards on the canal, was making a few turns on the river to see how her machinery wrought, preparatory to her being examined by the steamboat inspector before being handed over to the owners. While putting about in Hochelaga Bay, opposite the Maligeon Brook, the boiler burst, and so violent was the explosion that several pieces of iron were thrown to the top of the bank, which is not less than fifty feet high at that spot. About thirty men were on board, fifteen of these being the crew, and two women. Four were instantly killed, two of whom have not yet been extricated from the wreck. The Captain had a miraculous escape, having been thrown about thirty feet in the air, from whence he fell into the river. The killed are J. Lee, the son of the Captain, Jean Reginbel, of Rigaud and Charlemeau of Longueil. The name of the two still among the wreck were not ascertained. Seven of the wounded were carried as soon as possible to the Hotel Dieu in the Express Company's waggons, and every assistance was rendered them. The utmost attention was shown them by the surgeon of the Royal Artillery, Drs. Raymond, Richard Cottot, Richelieu, C. Picault and Boyer. Several priests also hastened to the spot, and the last rites were administered to Xavier Lefebre by the Rev. Canon Pare and other priests. Among the wounded are Antoine Larocque, of Rigaud, who had both legs broken, and Theopoile Malette of St. Jerome; one leg broken, besides being seriously burned in various parts of his body. A number escaped with contusions of greater or lesser severity, among these being the two women. Alderman Coutant, with his usual activity, was of great assistance. The Coroner called a jury together, but the inquest was not concluded last night.—Montreal Herald.

Massacre of Friendly Indians.

The Governor of Idaho has addressed a letter to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, informing him of the massacre of sixteen friendly Indians on the 11th of March, fifteen miles above that city, near the mouth of Moore's Creek, on the Boise River, by a party of citizens of the country. He concludes by saying:

"There were but two grown males; the rest were women and children. The immediate settlers, miners, reported against the murder, and their statement I shall send you in a few days, showing that the Indians were defenceless and peaceable. If anything will serve to bring on a general Indian war, it is such as these. I have gathered the rest of the tribe and placed them under the protection of the military at this post. The excitement runs high, and I have all I can do to carry out my instructions against the depraved moral sentiment evinced toward the poor savages. Things look stormy just now; but when the road to the Indian country becomes passable I shall quiet the troubled waters. In no case that I have examined have the red men been the aggressor; but invariably the trouble springs from some fiendish outrage of bad white men."

A correspondent from Fortress Monroe says:—"Upon introduction, I obtained a pass to enter the Fortress, where I had not been many hours when I met the great rebel chief, Jeff. Davis, face, to face, while he was taking his usual daily walk on the ramparts, under escort of an officer by his side and two armed soldiers behind him and I had a good view of him as he passed me. He was well dressed, had a high-colored felt hat, and new boots—His eye was clear and bright, his steps firm, and his bearing as proud as a Roman conqueror. He is indulged in this recreation every day, and is apparently cheerful and free from every care. During the walks he frequently recites scraps of Latin and Greek poetry. He is priviledged with the use of the fine library of the Fortress, and is permitted to write, of course under inspection of the command ing officer—He is a great smoker, and when in his apartment end s his time in writing, reading, and praying. Alternately he is very quiet and pleasant, and reative and boisterous. He freely expresses his opinion about the generals and leaders on both sides. He thinks McClellan was our greatest general, and says Grant is no soldier, nothing but a butcher, Lincoln was a good-natured man, but a jackass; Andrew Johnston is pretty smart and inclined to do the fair thing so far as he can, but he is not a great man. He thinks his capture was very unjust, as he was fairly paroled by the surrender of Lee and Johnston, and says that if he had any idea of being taken, he could easily have made his escape.

THE WOOL TRADE.—The imposition of an ad valorem duty on wool renders it necessary that wool growers should pay more than ordinary attention in shearing and in selecting their fleeces. The following are the duties imposed on the different qualities:—Wool worth 12c. per lb. and under, 3c. per lb.; over 24s. and not over 32c., 10c. per lb. and 10 per cent; over 32c., 12c. per lb. and 10 per cent. This system will necessitate the careful separation of the various qualities of wool by the farmer, the fine and the long, the dirty and the clean, being kept entirely separate. Each fleece should also be tied up separately. Prices will this season depend upon the quality of the wool and the manner in which it is classified. Farmers should, therefore, be very particular in classifying and properly cleansing their clips.

AN ENGLISH CHURCH MUTILATED.—On the night of the Queen's birthday a villainous proceeding occurred in the township of the Gore of Toronto, a few miles to the west-ward of this city. A band of ruffians broke into the English church at Castlemore, and destroyed every pane of glass in the edifice, tore down one pulpit and otherwise mutilated the other. Seats were smashed in pieces, and a large copy of the Bible was taken from the pulpit, torn in atoms and scattered over the church and adjoining graveyard. The vestry-room was also entered, and everything of value either totally destroyed or carried away.—Leader.

About five hundred emigrants arrived in Toronto on Saturday night, and were detained there over Sunday in consequence of the trains not running. They were all bound for the Western States. Yesterday about a hundred Norwegians, of a very respectable class, passed Kingston on the steamer Spartan. They too, are on their way to the Western States. By the mass of immigrants Canada is completely ignored.

Some time since parties in wall street were victimized by a series of forged warehouse certificates, to the amount of $300,000. Two or three rogues were caught, one of them is a lone is asylum in France. It was necessary, however, to find a man named Howe, and the detectives at least traced him to Rochester, where they arrested him on Wednesday.

A man named John McGregor was drowned on the 4th inst., at the Flat rapids, McNab, whilst attempting to cross the river on two saw logs. He was a married man and leaves a wife and two small children. His brother-in-law was near him at the time, but could render him no assistance.—Ottawa Adv.

Important Will Case in Ireland.

In the Dublin Court of Probate, a singular trial was commenced, which remarkably illustrates the influence exercised by the Roman Catholic religious orders over the minds and actions of members of that communion. In the year 1859 a certain Mr. William Murphy died leaving behind him large property, which he acquired in the course of his dealings as a cattle salesman and grazier. At his death he left five children, three sons and two daughters, all of whom, except the eldest son, who was left only ad sanciety of £200, he fairly provided for. The second and third eldest sons inherited his extensive farm-simple estate in the counties of Roscommon, Westmeath, Meath, Wicklow, and Dublin, and the two daughters became entitled to a rent charged of £400 per annum, and a fortune of £3000, each in case they married; but in the event of their embracing a religious life, for which both of them manifested a desire, one half of the rent charge was to revert to the holder in fee of the property, the testator evidently being desirous that none of his money should be devoted to making either of his daughters a nun. On the day after Mr. Murphy's death his second eldest son, Charles, died, and on the next following day the eldest daughter, Maria, departed this life. There were then left surviving the eldest son, John, with his two children, William and Frances, and the youngest daughter Margaret Ellen. James had fallen in for the patrimonial residence where he lived with his sister, and where he received a good deal of company, amongst whom the most frequent and most cherished visitor was the Rev. Eustace Murphy, a member of the order of St Dominic or "Order of Preachers," as it is indifferently called. This Rev. person appears to have ingratiated himself with Mr. Murphy, and when that gentleman came to make a will, on the 20th January, 1858, one of the principal bequests in it was a legacy to his clerical friend of £3000. In addition to this, legacies were left to Roman Catholic priests, institutions, and charities amounting in the whole to £102,300.—Mr. James Murphy died in January, 1860, his eldest brother, John having predeceased him, and Miss Margaret Ellen Murphy, by his death, found herself the possessor of a sum of about £35,000. She continued to live at the residence of her father for some time, but by and by her nephew William (son of John, who had been so scantily provided for by old William Murphy), who had come into possession of the patrimony, the real estate alone of which is worth £12,000 a year, insisted on her leaving the house, and accordingly she removed to various places, finally she purchasing and taking up her abode at the establishment of some Loretto nuns at Baymount Castle, county of Dublin, where she erected a chapel or oratory, to which the same Rev. Eustace Murphy daily officiated as celebrant of mass for her. She was in very delicate health and unable to act energetically in reference to her monetary affairs. At this period a sum of £38000 was advanced by her to the Dominicans on a mortgage of the community house in Rutland Square, and on their chapel in Dominick Street. This mortgage was cancelled in a will made by her on the 22nd September last, in which she leaves to three clergymen of the order the sum of £8000 as "a special gift, and as an expression of heartfelt gratitude for their attention;" to Archbishop Cullen, £1200; the Jesuits, £1000; St. Vincent's Hospital, £2000; Roman Catholic Blind Asylum, £3000; Roman Catholic Monastery of Mount Melleray, county of Waterford, £500; Roman Catholic Magdalen Asylum, £4 00; Roman Catholic Reformatory, £3000; Roman Catholic House of Refuge, £200, and so forth. In the will she added that in case any attempt were made to frustrate her intentions by legal means, all these sums, amounting to or so on £50,000, were left to Archbishop Cullen, or to his successors, to Monk, Bishop of Dublin, for his or their sole and uncontrolled use. The executrix and residuary legatee was Mrs. Woods, her housek eper; but with regard to the residue, written instructions for its application, in which Mrs. Woods would have very little interest, were left with her. This will is now contested by Mr. William Murphy, son of the testatrix's brother John, in whom nearly all the property of the family has concentred, on the ground that it was not executed according to the statute, that the testatrix was not of sound mind, memory, and understanding, and that it was procured by the undue influence of Mrs Woods and the Rev. Eustace Murphy. The case has excited considerable interest, and is likely to last for some days. In the course of his cross-examination by counsel for the defendant, Mr. John Smyth, the solicitor, who prepared the will, was asked—

Who suggested to the sisters about leaving the property to Archbishop Cullen absolutely?

Witness—No one; I put it to myself.

Judge Keogh—Was not that an evasion of the law?

Witness—If a law is made to reach individuals, as the penal laws of the country, we would, I think, be justified in evading it. My father told me he could not ride a horse value for more than £5, and I should not hesitate to evade such a penal statute as far as my ability would enable me to do it. (A laugh.) Miss Murphy told me a somewhat analogous case had been decided in the Court of Chancery and for me to secure the parties, and I admit freely I did it.

Judge K.—She gave you no hint about how to do it?

Witness—No; she left it to my own ingenuity

The efficacy of Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers in Coughs, Colds, and all Bronchial affections, and cheering the afflicted, has passed into a proverb. In the United States, where these marvellous Wafers are known, they bear down all opposition and eclipse all rivalry; the demand for them has steadily increased for the last twenty years, until now the sales average over one hundred thousand boxes a year. Eminent members of the medical profession without number admit that they know of no preparation producing such beneficial results as these Wafers.—When taken in season they effect a permanent cure. Sold by every druggist and most of the respectable stores throughout the Province, at 25 cts per box.

THE ERIE CANAL.—The Canal is 360 miles in length, and the Tolls, collected upon it for 1861 amounted to over three million dollars, which is nearly double the amount collected in any previous year; and while our neighbors have so much reason to be pleased at this result, it is gratifying to know that the sales of the "Canadian Pain Destroyer," for the cure of coughs, colds, sprains, bruises, rheumatism, frost-bites, chilblains, &c., is increasing much faster. Sold by all Medicine dealers at 25 cts. per bottle.

THE DAILY REVIEW.

A NEW FIRST-CLASS INDEPENDENT Daily, bearing the above title, will be commenced in Montreal on Friday, the 1st of June.

It is proposed that this paper shall be equal to any now existing in Montreal for the fulness and accuracy of its information and reports on matters of general or commercial interest, while its editorial articles will be marked by a spirit of justice and liberality in the treatment of all subjects as they arise.

In Politics The Daily Review will aim at independence, supporting such measures as appear to be necessary or conducive to the welfare of the country, without regard to the sources whence they emanate; taking as a guiding principle, that support should be extended to every proper sentiment expressed or action performed. At the same time the publishers feel that too high an estimate of the privileges now enjoyed in connection with the Mother Country cannot be taken, and pledge their influence towards strengthening that connection, and opposing everything that tends to our absorption by a neighbouring nation.

Subscriptions—Five Dollars per annum, delivered in the city, or Four Dollars per mail (payable in advance).

From the manifest interest already taken in connection with this enterprise, the Publishers and Proprietors of The Daily Review are assured that that paper will enjoy a large circulation amongst the most influential, public-spirited and wealthy of our citizens; and can confidently assert that advantages second to none now offered by existing city journals, will be presented to Advertisers.

The rates of advertising will be such as are common to daily papers. Those advertisements given at the commencement allowed special advantages.

A LIBERAL

Conservative Newspaper

A NEW VOLUME OF THE

Toronto Daily Evening Journal

[ESTABLISHED IN 1861.]

HAS REAPPEARED.

The "JOURNAL" was published for three years in Toronto as a Weekly, and for two years as a Daily Journal. Arrangements have been completed by which the Proprietor will be enabled to enlarge and otherwise improve it. It will, in future, contain the Morning and Evening Telegrams, Police Report of the same day, together with Editorials, Local, Canadian, American, and Foreign News, and Choice Literary Selections.

It is necessary that the Proprietor should have the hearty and earnest co-operation of his fellow citizens. The patronage of the enterprise, intelligence, and business of every community where newspapers are established. It is the part of true wisdom for a city to encourage all such enterprises as are calculated to sustain, advance or promote its welfare, its commerce, its intelligence, or its honour. Let no man think that by letting the public take care of itself he is not neglecting his own interests and his highest duty. The sacrifice or the part of friends and the public at large will not be great in order to triumphantly sustain the Evening Journal.

TO BUSINESS MEN.

The systematic way in which the paper has been circulated, together with the great advantages afforded to the business community by means of the 'Special Editions' that have frequently been issued, have obtained for the Evening Journal the reputation of being an excellent advertising medium; consequently, business men in this city and elsewhere have employed the greater part of the space for their announcements. Indeed, often the advertising space has been so well filled that it has been impossible to accommodate very many Toronto business men, who have, from time to time, kindly expressed a willingness to advertise in the Journal.

No expense has been spared or time lost in providing ways and means to place the paper in the position that the proprietor has been anxious to have it occupy.

NEW TYPES, &c.,

Have been purchased to improve the typographical appearance of the Evening Journal. The length and width of the columns will be changed. Advertisements will now be condensed as much as possible so as to accommodate all City Advertisers, and the Public generally.

☞ Regular advertisers participate in the advantages of all the Special Editions of the paper, without any extra charge.

A plan has been adopted for having the paper circulated in all parts of the city, so that Advertisers may rest assured that their interests will be promoted.

ADVERTISING RATES.

A new feature has been introduced in connection with this paper, viz.: A Cheaper System of Advertising than has ever been offered to the Public.—Advertisements will be inserted for Seven Cents per line the first insertion, and two Cents per line for each subsequent insertion. And if an advertiser can put all he has to say in two lines, the charge will be only Fourteen Cents, and Four Cents for every additional insertion. Short Notices of Births, Deaths, Marriages, Houses to Let, Properties for Sale, Meetings, &c., of five lines or less, will be inserted for Fifteen Cents the first insertion, and Seven Cents for each subsequent insertion. All advertisements (with the exception enumerated) to be inserted for a short time, will be charged at the rate of Seven Cents per line first insertion, and Two Cents per line for every additional insertion. The privilege of Annual Advertisers is limited to their own business.

☞ Yearly Advertisements charged according to the space required. Business and Professional Cards (without change) will be inserted at Two Dollars per line by the year, when they contain six lines or less. Advertisements not accompanied by written directions will be inserted until forbid, and charged accordingly. Accounts with yearly advertisers will be settled monthly, unless otherwise arranged.

TERMS.

The "Evening Journal" will be reduced to One Cent per copy, Six Cents a week; or, Four Dollars per annum Mailed, or delivered by Carriers in any part of the City.

☞ A Local Story, entitled "A Re-constructed Husband," will be commenced in the First Number of the New Volume of the "Toronto Daily Evening Journal," and will be continued until finished.

A. H. ST. GERMAIN,
Editor and Proprietor.

Money to Loan.

THE CANADA LANDED CREDIT COMPANY are prepared to make advances on the system, to Landed Proprietors, in sums varying from $200 to $4,000.

CREDIT FONCIER

The loans are repayable at long dates by means of a Sinking Fund, in which from time to time small sums are placed, and which at compound interest, will, at the end of the period agreed on, render the borrower absolutely free, he having, however, always the privilege of paying off the mortgage at any moment that suits his convenience.

For further information and forms of requisition for loans, application to be made to the Secretary.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any Cologne, used to bathe the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headache, &c. It is manufactured from the rich southern Magnolia, and has obtained a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

"Jes' so!"—"Exactly I"—Solon Shingle said they were there "every time." If he felt "ourley" in the morning, he took Plantation Bitters; if he felt weary at night, he took Plantation Bitters; if he lacked appetite, was weak, languid or unusually oppressed, he took Plantation Bitters; and they never failed to set him on his pins square and firm.

Few persons want any better authority; but as some may, just read the following:

" " " " I owe much to you, for I verily believe the Plantation Bitters have saved my life.

REV. W. H. WAGONER, Madrid, N. Y."

" " " " I have been a great sufferer from Dyspepsia, and had to abandon preaching. " " The Plantation Bitters have cured me.

REV. C. A. MILLWOOD, New York City.

" " " " I had lost all appetite—was so weak and enervated I could hardly walk, and had a perfect dread of society. " " " The Plantation Bitters have set me all right.

JAMES HEMINWAY, St. Louis, Mo."

" " " " The Plantation Bitters have cured me of a derangement of the Kidneys and Urinary Organs, that distressed me for years. They act like a charm.

C. C. MOORE, 254 Broadway, N. Y."

Mrs. O. M. DEVOE, manager of the Union Home School for Soldiers' Children, says she "has given it to the weak and invalid children under her charge, with the most happy and gratifying results." "We have received over a hundred reams of such certificates, but no advertisement is so effective as what people themselves say of a good article. Our fortune and our reputation is at stake. The original quality and high character of these goods will be sustained under every and all circumstances. They have already obtained a sale in every town, village, parish and hamlet among civilized nations. Base imitators try to come as near our name and style as they can, and because a good article cannot be sold as low as a poor one, they find some support from parties who do not care what they sell. Be on your guard. See our private stamp over the cork.

Over a Million Dollars Saved!

Gentleman:—"I had a negro man worth $1,200 who took cold from a bad hurt in the leg, and was useless for over a year. I had used everything I could hear of without benefit, until I tried the Mexican Mustang Liniment.—It soon effected a permanent cure."

J. L. DOWNING.

Montgomery, Ala., June 13, 1859.

"I take pleasure in recommending the Mexican Mustang Liniment as a valuable and indispensible article for Sprains, Sores, Scratches or Galls on Horses. Our men all say it acts like magic."

J. W. HEWITT,
Foreman for Amedica, Wells, Fargo's and Harnden's Express.

"The Sprain of my daughters ankle, occasioned while skating last winter, was entirely cured in one week, after she commenced using your celebrated Mustang Liniment.

ED. KELLY."

Gloucester, Mass., Aug 1, 1865.

It is an admitted fact that the Mexican Mustang Liniment performs more cures in shorter time, on man and beast, than any article ever discovered. Families, livery-men and painters should always have it on hand. Quick and sure it certainly is. All genuine is wrapped in steel-plate engravings, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook Chemist, and the private U. S. stamp of Demas Barnes & Co over the top.

An effort has been made to counterfeit it with a cheap stone plate label. Look closely!

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

It is a most delightful Hair Dressing.
It eradicates scurf and dandruff.
It keeps the hair rich, soft and glossy.
It prevents hair turning gray and falling off.
It restores hair upon prematurely bald heads.
This is just what Lyon's Kathairon will do. It is pretty—it is cheap—durable. It is literally sold by the car-load, and yet its almost increasing, until there is hardly a country store that does not keep it, or a family that does not use it.

E. THOMAS LYON, Chemist, N. Y.

Who would not be beautiful? Who would not add to their beauty? What gives that marble purity and distingue appearance we observe upon the stage, and in the city belle? It is no longer a secret. They use Hagan's Magnolia Balm. Its continued use removes tan, freckles, pimples and roughness, from the face and hands, and leaves the complexion smooth, transparent, blooming and ravishing. Unlike many cosmetics, it contains no material injurious to the skin. Any Druggists will order it for you, if not on hand, at 75 cts per bottle.

Helmstreet's inimitable Hair Coloring is not a dye. All instantaneous dyes are composed of lunar caustic, and more or less destroy the vitality and beauty of the hair. This is the original Hair Coloring, and has been growing in favor over twenty years. It restores gray hair to its original color by gradual absorption, in a most remarkable manner. It is also a beautiful hair dressing. Sold in two sizes—50 cents and $1— by all dealers.

Poetry.

JANET.

"What ails thee, daughter Janet,
That your cheek's so full of woe?
When at morn you went to market,
Your face was all aglow;
Your lips were red as cherries,
Your eye was bright and clear;
What ails thee, daughter Janet?
Come, tell your mother dear?"

"Oh! I took my eggs to market,
And I sold them at the fair,
When who but Rob, the Miller,
Should I see standing there;
He took me up behind him,
And the maid's did float and roar;
Is it thus I'm to be laughed at?
Is it right?—say, mother, dear?"

"Don't be foolish, fough or Janet,
You are old enough to tell,
Many take their eggs to market
Who have more than eggs to sell;
The Miller has a he 66 and land,
Fine rent-free tithes all clear,
And you'll always ride to market,
If he weds you, daughter, dear?"

A HAPPY BENEDICT — Last week (writes a provincial editor, not a hundred miles from Ayr,) a gentleman called at our printing-office, and requested that we would print for him about two hundred letters.—On handing the copy to us, we were surprised to read the following contents:—"My dear —— I take to inform you that my dear wife, Susan, presented me with a fine ——, at —o'clock; and that she and the dear babe are doing as well as can be expected. You are aware, that this is my ——-tenth blessing.—Ever yours, &c., —— ——. This "novel order" certainly caused us to cast an inquiring look—as much as to say, "Are you in earnest?" and his reply was, I am really in earnest." You know, be continued "Mrs. —— has just been confined with the twelfth little hopeful, and I see no prospect of her arriving at the end of the chapter. Now, every accouchement I have to write to upwards of twenty friends and relations; therefore, if I have a stock of printed forms by me, all I shall have to do, on these interesting occasions, will be to fill the blanks." "Well," we rejoined, "but now that she has completed the round dozen the chances are against the number augmenting." "Not at all," he replied; "Mrs. —— is a mother was remarkably fond of strawberries, and she had nineteen children. My wife is as fond of strawberries, and eats large quantities every year, so that, like mother like daughter." We were not learned enough in connubial mysteries, to understand, much less to reply to the logic, so we took up the copy and carried it into the printing office; and, being bachelors, wended our way, much wondering what mysterious connexion there could be between babies and strawberries, and admiring the philosophy of our Benedict, who could wear a smooth chin, and a resigned countenance, with twelve children, and the prospect of an indefinite augmentation of that awful number. Oh dear, on that day, has the following entry: "Resolved, never to marry a woman that loves strawberries over much." — Aberdeen Herald.

THE AGE OF SLANG.—This is evidently the age of slang. The fast young man of the present day is unintelligible to the matter of fact, slow-going fogy who had been left in the confines of the unexpressive vernacular of his fathers. The fast young man, when he would drink, (and that's always) asks for a 'wash.' When he would smoke, he demands a 'torch.' When he eats, he 'wades in his hash.' When he is drunk, he is 'seedy.' When he gambles, he sings the 'tune o' the board.' When he sleeps, he is 'under the blinks,' and when he steals he 'goes through' somebody. His friends are 'gay ducks' 'no shoulders,' 'bully boys,' and 'trumps.' His enemies are 'cusses,' 'cheats, frauds and suckers.' A good dancer throws himself into a daughter attitude.' A man is a 'cuss,' and a woman a 'hen.' Would it not be a paying thing for an enterprising man to get up a slang dictionary? If we were to propound this last interrogatory to a fast young man he would unhesitatingly respond 'you bet.'

The late Rev. Dr. Sutton, vicar of Sheffield once said to the late Mr. Peech, a veterinary surgeon;

"Mr. Peech, how is it that you have no called upon me for your account.

"Oh!" said Mr. Peech, "I never asked a gentleman for money."

"Indeed!" said the vicar; then how do you get on if he don't pay?"

"Why," replied Mr. Peech, "after a certain time I conclude that he's not a gentleman, and then I ask him."

A batchelor to whom his neice applied for advice on the question of choosing between two suitors, one of which was rich and the other was poor—the latter, of course being the most ardent, as well as the favorite lover—sententiously replied.

"My dear, the question being stripped of all illusory elements, your choice simply lies between love and beef. Now, love is an idea, while beef is a reality. Love you can get along without; but beef you must have. Therefore make sure of your beef."

It being reported that Lady Caroline had, in a moment of passion knocked down one of her pages with a stool, the poet Moore, to whom this was told by Lord stanger ford, observed,—

Oh nothing is more natural for a literary lady than to double down a page.

I would rather, replied his lordship, advise Lady Caroline to turn over a new leaf.

A story is told of a Methodist, at whose house an itinerant preacher was passing the night, who, when bed-time came and family prayers were suggested, in searching for a Bible, finally produced a couple of torn leaves of the good book with the naive remark.—

I didn't know I was so near out of Bibles.

A minister in Scotland recently, when his deacons hinted that he might preach three sermons on the Sabbath, said:—'Preach three sermons! Never! That is an invention of Beelzebub for destroying the effect of two good ones, and kill the minister.

Artemus Ward says, in reference to the production of the Lady of Lyons at the Salt Lake City theatre:—'An aged Mormon rose and went out with his twenty-four wives, angrily stating that he would not sit and see a play where a man made such a cussed fuss over one woman.'

There is much wisdom in a few words spoken by an English farmer who advised "to mow and before it is hungry, to rat it before it is ripe, and to weed it before it is foul."

Why is a seamstress like a pick-pocket? —Because she cuts and runs.

The custom of advertising is a custom that brings custom.

What is the worst seat a man can sit on? —Self-conceit.

See what the most popular and widely circulated periodicals say of our Establishment:

From the "Dispatch" of February 28, 1865.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the announcement of Messrs. Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, Silver Ware, and Fancy Goods, in our advertising columns. We are personally acquainted with the members of this firm and know them to be gentlemen of sterling worth and integrity. Their stock of goods, for variety and extent, we have scarcely seen paralleled.

From the "Mirror of Fashion," March 1, 1865

Messrs. Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, etc., opened on the 15th ult., and we venture to say that no finer display of goods was ever exhibited by any establishment in this city. The ladies throughout their bizaar almost to suffocation, although the streets were rendered nearly impassable by the melted snow and slush We predict for them a wonderful success.

From the "Ledger," February 28, 1865.

Our lady friends should visit the extensive establishment of Messrs Devaugh & Co, No. 15 Maiden Lane, if they wish to indulge themselves with a sight which they will long remember. Such a profusion of elegant Watches Chains, Rings, Earrings, and, in short, of Jewelry of every name, kind and description, we never before witnessed. Their silver and plated ware is superb and almost casts into the shade the other splendid establishments which have long been the boast of our city. It is estimated that their stock is worth not less than one million of dollars.

How You Can Get a Prize.

Send Twenty-Five Cents to us and as soon as we receive it we will mail you a Certificate showing what you are entitled to. If the article or articles please you, send back the Certificate and One Dollar and we will forward you the article, no matter how costly it may be. If the article is not what you wish, state, when you send the Certificate and Dollar, what other article of the same value you prefer and we will send it. If you wish more than one Certificate send us $1 and we will send five; for $2, eleven; for $5, thirty; for $10, sixty; for $15, one hundred.

Agents are wanted in the Army and in every place. We have an immense stock of goods to dispose of, and need a large number of Agents. Our terms to Agents are very liberal and some even of our Lady Agents are making from $5 to $20 a day. We give Agents 50 per cent. on all Certificates they sell provided they remit us not less than $1 for eight.

GREAT IMPROVEMENT IN

SEWING MACHINES.

EMPIRE SHUTTLE MACHINE!

PATENTED FEB. 14th, 1860.

Salesrooms, { 536 Broadway, New York. 252 Washington St., Boston.

THIS MACHINE is constructed on entirely new principles of mechanism, possessing many rare and valuable improvements, having been examined by the most profound experts, and pronounced to be

Simplicity and Perfection Combined.

It has a straight needle, perpendicular action, makes the lock or shuttle stitch which will neither rip nor ravel, and is alike on both sides; performs perfect sewing on every description of material, from leather to the finest Nainsook muslin, with cotton, linen or silk thread, from the coarsest to the finest number. Having neither CAM nor COGWHEEL, and the least possible friction, it runs as smooth as glass and is

Emphatically a Noiseless Machine.

It requires FIFTY PER CENT less power to drive it than any other Machine in the market. A child twelve years of age can work it easily, without fatigue or injury to health

Its strength and Wonderful Simplicity of construction renders it almost impossible to get out of order, and is GUARANTEED by the Company to give entire satisfaction

We respectfully invite all those who may desire to supply themselves with a superior article, to come and examine the Unrivalled Machine.

But in a more especial manner do we elicit the patronage of

Merchant Tailors,	Corset Makers,
Coach Makers.	Gaiter Fitters,
Hoop Skirt Manufacturers.	Shoe Binders.
Shirt and Bosom Makers.	Vest and Pantaloon Makers.
	Dress Makers.

Religious and Charitable Institutions will be liberally dealt with.

One half hour's instruction is sufficient to enable any person to work the Machine to their entire satisfaction.

Agents wanted for all Towns in the United States, where agents are not already established. Also for Cuba, Mexico, Central and South America, to whom a liberal discount will be given.

Terms invariably Cash on delivery.

PIANO-FORTES.

BOSTON NEW PATENT.

ARE THE ONLY INSTRUMENTS constructed on a truly scientific principle, that have greater strength, and will remain longer in tune than any other Piano. The construction is simple and natural, as the strongest timber in the body of the instrument is chosen direct with the grain, the sound boards are merely two finished planks of thin wood, like the front and back of a violin; the strings are stretched to a strong iron frame, which is separate and entirely independent of the case, thereby dispensing with the old system of straining by subjecting straight bridges, preserving at the same time The Over Strung Bass, of which Mr Dodson is the inventor. By these improvements we gain much more vibratory power, at the same time preserving all its purity and richness of tone.

They have received the highest testimonials from the Press, and all the principal artists in the country, among which are:

Harry Sanderson,	L. M. Gottschalk,
Max Maretzek,	S. Thalberg,
Theodore Rinfield,	S. Wm Mason,
Herman Wedenkampf,	A. Barili
Francis H. Brown,	M. Strakosch,
Wm. Henry Fry.	Charle Formi

Mr. KOEMMUND THALBERG, the great pianist, says:—I have examined your new Piano-fortes and I cordially approve of its system of construction. Its principle, by which great increase of vibratory power is obtained, bring very simple and perfectly pleasing blood. The tone is grand and noble; it has great capacity for sustaining the sound or singing, and its volume of tone or power I have never heard excelled in depth, purity and sympathetic sweetness.

Wm. HENRY FRY, late musical critic of the N. Y. Tribune says:—I have examined your newly invented Piano-Fortes. They merit all the praise given to them by Messrs. Timbers, Gottschalk, Strackosch, Mason and others. As regards the structure, they are original and philosophical in purity, volume, and combination of tone; in vocal resemblance, that governing excellence which enables the soloist to "sing" on the instrument. Your Pianos deserve the highest rank. Your invention, in my opinion, is destined to work radical changes in the manufacture of Pianos throughout the world.

From the N. Y. Herald, Sept. 5—"upon a careful examination of Dodson Piano-Forte, we find the results obtained are a very fine singing tone, great purity and brilliancy throughout the entire instrument, not often found in Pianos constructed upon the old plan.

The N. Y. Times, July 13, says—We have now an instrument without an equal. It sings with a smoothe delicacy, perfectly unattainable on any other instrument, an ordinary player obtains with no exertion, the fullness of a Grand Piano and they must speedily supercede the old styles.

GENTLEMEN:—Having thoroughly examined and tested the Piano-Fortes invented and patented by Mr S. R. Dodson, I am of the opinion that the tone resulting from his improvements are, as exhibited in the instruments under examination in point of richness, depth and brilliancy, equals that of the best Grand Piano-Fortes, and excells them in pure, musical and actual tone, power thus approaching nearer to what I consider perfection in the instrument than has yet been achieved by any other system of manufacture.

Yours respectfully,
L. M. GOTTSCHALK.

LLOYD'S GREAT TOPOGRAPHICAL RAILWAY and COUNTY MAP of ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND and WALES—Six feet large, mounted and varnished—out in $100,000 and four years time; was finished July 28, and is the best map ever made since the world was formed; shows 200,000 cities, towns, villages, market places, post offices, castles, country seats and 30,000 railways and railway stations, with the distance between each station marked plainly, and the official name and total length of each railway in actual operation up to June, 1866, is given. The railway stations are all numerically and alphabetically arranged. The lakes, rivers, hills and mountains are exhibited, with the altitude of each in feet, made from trigonometrical surveys by our own engineers, draughtsmen and Photographers sent to England expressly to make a superior map of that country; the whole engraved on steel, colored superbly in counties, in united and varnished. Price 8 shillings sterling ($2). No map at $10 can compare to this. Canvassers throughout the world wanted. Also men, with a small capital, to go to Canada, Chicago, Cincinnati, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, East and West Indies, Australia and California, to open offices. Can make a fortune while selling this and other maps to sub-agents. Eighty thousand copies of this map were subscribed for in England before going to press, as can be shown by our agents letters to us. Ten new maps now under way

OFFICE 581 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

GUARANTEE—After a fair trial, if any purchaser does not regard the Finkle & Lyon Sewing Machine as superior to any machine in market, he can return it and have his money. It has taken many of the highest prizes—is less complicated than any other first class machine,—does a wider range of work without changing,—requires no taking apart to clean or oil, and no "lessons" to set needle, regulate tension, or operate machine.

N. B. Any Clergyman sending us two orders for Machines, shall receive one for himself as a present. The same proposition is extended to Profession and Teachers.

We have now completed our New Manufactory at a cost of some $200,000, including New Patents and important improvements; and the object of the above proposition is to secure the immediate introduction of our improved machine into every town in the United States without incurring the great expense of a travelling agent.

This proposition cannot avail in towns occupied by our own agents.

Please send for descriptive Catalogue, wit samples of sewing.

The Daily Telegraph.

AT the present crisis of Provincial affairs, the publishers feel that there is room in the City of Toronto for an independent evening journal, which, without party spirit, shall discuss dispassionately the important issues now occupying so large a share of public attention. Journals fettered by political ties, and biassed by particular interests, are not free to present to their readers those issues in the broad and comprehensive manner which is now more than ever desirable. In addition to this, events now crowd so thickly upon us that the public naturally desire more frequent supplies of information than the morning papers can give. To meet these desiderata the publication of THE DAILY TELEGRAPH is designed. Although attached to no political party,

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH

will give no uncertain sound upon public affairs. Amongst other things, it will advocate:—

1. British Connection, strenuously opposing the formation of any political union with the neighbouring Republic

2. Confederation of the British North American Provinces so soon as the full consent of the Maritime Provinces is obtained. This measure is imperatively required by the hostile commercial and political attitude of the United States government. It is, moreover, desirable as forming the germ of nationality which may be further developed in the future.

3. Free Trade, as far as is compatible with the necessities of the revenue; also, a renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty with our neighbors as soon as they are prepared to treat with us upon just and equitable terms.

4. The encouragement of Emigration and a more liberal management of the public lands, so as to promote the opening up of our waste territory, and its occupation by bona fide settlers.

5. The Extension of Trade Relations with other British colonies and with foreign nations.

6. In British affairs moderate and judicious reform, but not violent organic change in a Democratic direction.

Other public questions, as they arise, will be dealt with in the same moderate and liberal spirit.

During the approaching session of Parliament its proceedings will be duly reported, and at all times the latest intelligence received up to the time of going to press will be published

The Markets and matters of interest to commercial men will receive special attention in THE DAILY TELEGRAPH

Of all local matters of public importance, courts of law, school boards, public meetings, &c., &c., full and accurate reports will be given. To the proceedings of the City Council special attention will be given, and in corporation matters THE DAILY TELEGRAPH will, contrary to the present practice, give an unswerving support to those who faithfully serve the interests of the city, irrespective of party and political leanings.

At the same time it will unsparingly expose all abuses and denounce all corruption, no matter who the guilty parties may be.

The first number will be issued on the 21st May, neatly printed on good white paper, delivered to subscribers at the rate of $5 per year, payable in advance, or ten cents per week.—Subscriptions by post, $4.50 per annum, invariably in advance.

SHADOWS OF HEAVEN.

BY A. C. GILLIES.

Though hearts are torn asunder,
And friends are borne away,
And there are mansions yonder,
In realms of endless day?

Where hearts again united
In bonds of peace and love,
Where friendship truly plighted
Will live in bliss above;

Where father, sister, mother,
Beyond this world of strife,
Will recognize each other
In pure undying life?

The yearnings of our being,
Like suns in water clear,
Are powerful in proving,
That friendship is not here.

That, in a world beyond us,
On Eden's happy shore,
God will again unite us
In love for evermore.

The social hours that cheer us
With pure and perfect love,
Are all prophetic shadows
Of endless life above.

As water daily glasses
The firmament so true,
Enough of friendship passes,
Tho' quick, before our view.

To lure us on for ever,
With promises to pay,
The sad arrears that sever,
Our friends along the way.

Throughout the world around us,
Where sin and death abounds,
Enough of beauty pleases,
Wherever man is found.

To prove there is a fountain
Whence beauty flows abroad,
Since beauty, like the lightning,
Is just the shade of God.

The moments here with Jesus
We spend in pray'r and praise,
According as they please us,
Are proofs of better days.

The social hours that cheer us
With pure and perfect love,
Are all prophetic shadows
Of heavenly life above.

A Year After Marriage.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

Fanny would have answered this pleasant remark in the same strain, had not the idea of her husband's real unhappiness come up too vividly before her mind to allow her to trifle with his name, in the utterance of sentiments, as entertained by him, which were not true. She heard it, under the circumstances, only as a cutting rebuke, and made no attempt to reply. Alas! He was not happy. Too painfully sensible was she of this. And as for herself, how wretched was all beneath this exterior show of gratification and delight! Only by a powerful effort was she enabled to rouse herself from this almost paralyzing consciousness of things as they really existed, so as to be able to act her part until the period came for her return home.

As for her husband, on leaving his house he proceeded at once to the Theatre.—Celeste never went through a pantomime with more spirit, nor danced with more exquisite ease and gracefulness, but it was all lost upon Harvey Lee. His eye followed the dancer, it is true, through every re-newing series of graceful attitudes, through all her light and airy circles, but he saw as one who sees not. His heart was not there.—At the first drop of the curtain he retired from the Theatre and turned his steps homeward. He had been prompted to do this by the suddenly suggested idea that Fanny would not, of course, go to the Museum, although she had declared her intention of so doing. In imagination, he saw her weeping alone in her chamber, and this touched his feelings. On arriving at home he went up stairs, fully expecting to find her an image of sadness and grief—and fully prepared to speak to her words of kindness. Much to his disappointment, he found her chamber empty.

"Where can she be?" he asked himself in some concern. "Surely she cannot have gone to the Museum, as she proposed."

Anxious to know the truth, and blaming himself for the extent to which he had carried his opposing spirit, Lee proceeded at once to the Museum, to ascertain if his wife were there, or not. For a moment or two he paused at the door before entering, to determine how he should meet Fanny if she were really there. This he was unable to do to his satisfaction. Drawing, therefore, his hat over his eyes, to prevent an instant recognition should she be near the door, he passed in, and glancing stealthily about, took his way down one of the side avenues, making cursory examinations of whatever met his eye, to prevent observation. The large saloon was crowded with old and young, grave and gay, for the Chinese Collection had but recently been opened, and was considered a chief attraction of the city. Every little group that arrested his attention was scanned with careful interest, but after passing entirely around the long and spacious room he had not discovered his wife.

"Where, then, can she be?" he asked himself with a livelier feeling of concern than he had experienced on discovering that she was not in her chamber at home.

In the next moment a light, laughing voice met his ear, whose tones were too familiar to be mistaken. It came from a group near by, and seemed to give life and animation to that group. Lee stood examining some Chinese figures in native costume at the time the well known sound of his wife's voice arrested his attention. He did not turn, for fear of being recognized, but stood still and listened attentively for any word that might reach his ear. The group with which Fanny was, seemed, as they really were, approaching the case of figures where Lee stood. But he feared to move from his position and shrink away, lest he should be noticed. He could only remain perfectly still, and apparently all absorbed in examining the curious display before him. In less than a minute Fanny was by his side. She was chattering with first one and then another of her companions, in a light, cheerful way, and seemed as if a single care or pain had never oppressed her feelings.

In a minute more all had passed on, and Lee stood again alone.

'Heartless creature,' he muttered between his teeth as he moved toward the door, through which he hastily emerged and found himself once more in the street. Instead of returning home, he took an opposite direction, walking with hurried steps, and yet, with the air of a man who had no defined purpose.

CHAPTER V.

It was ten o'clock when Mrs. Lee came home and found that her husband had not yet returned from the Theatre. For more than two hours she had been acting a part, and now the necessity for keeping up appearances being removed, her real feelings came out into activity, the stronger for their temporary unnatural suppression.

Anxious for her husband's return, yet dreading to meet him, she sat in her chamber awaiting him until the clock struck twelve, when she felt a sudden alarm in consequence of his prolonged absence.—This was not of any great duration, for soon after, Lee came in, but remained below for nearly an hour longer. Satisfied in regard to his safety, Fanny's accusing spirit returned, and she permitted herself to indulge in many unkind though tangament her husband.

When Lee finally made up his mind to seek his wife's chamber, he found her in bed and apparently asleep.

'Yes, heartless and insensible!' he inwardly exclaimed, as he perceived she that was, to all appearances, in a profound slumber. But she was as fully awake as himself, with a heart suffering as keenly as his own, and as bitterly regretting the occurrence, trifling in itself, that had separated their affections. As on former occasions, it was a long time before either of their agitated minds could sink away into unconsciousness. And, as on former occasions, the influence of sleep was soothing and salutary. But less so than before, for, as previous difficulties, misunderstandings, and false judgments, had only been suffered to pass from their rolling position in the mind, while they still held a place there, and exercised an influence, each new difficulty, misunderstanding and false judgment united with the others, and made every subsidence of agitations consequent upon this activity less perfect. Or, in a word, past misunderstandings, unexplained, united with present ones and threw over the mind of each a thicker veil of obscurity. It was for this reason, that, although their minds were less agitated, and each was less inclined, in the morning, to prefer mental accusations against the other, yet neither was disposed to make any overtures toward a reconciliation, for both felt they had been wronged, and especially had Lee been strung by the manifest indifference which Fanny had exhibited at the Museum. And besides, Fanny had made one or two remarks, such as "becoming the mere slave of his dictation," on the day before, that he could not get over.

As these thoughts and memories believe in Lee's mind the soothing influence of sleep gradually passed away, and he permitted the free indulgence of angry feelings against his wife. And it was the same with Fanny. The morning had advanced but little after their silent meeting at the breakfast table, before she was thinking of her husband with half uttered words of bitterness. And yet, both were deeply wounded, and both were more than half conscious that no real cause existed for their estrangement of feeling. But neither was willing to make concessions to the other, altogether both were conscious of being in fault.

It was nearly two weeks before their intercourse was again easy and pleasant.—During this period, both carefully avoided everything that it seemed might give offence; and yet, each being nervously sensitive and watchful, scarcely a day passed without one doing or saying something that annoyed the other, or in which some act or word was not misinterpreted. True, they both struggled against this feeling as wrong and endeavored not to be affected by little things, and thus succeeded in preserving a fair exterior toward each other, into which much that was kind and affectionate flowed as a living spirit from within.

Everything was going on smoothly once more, when a new chord was jarred and there came another crash of discord. Several friends had called in to spend an evening with them, among whom were Mrs. Woodman and Mr. and Mrs. Clarence.—The conversation was running on pleasantly, when a topic was started which some how or other led Mrs. Lee to make the following remark to Mrs Clarence,

'I don't know how it may strike you, but it seems to me that husbands in this country, at least, are too dictutional to their wives, and seem to think the doctrine of implicit obedience the only true one.'

'I believe there is a little tendency toward that,' Mrs. Clarence replied smiling—glancing at the same time toward her husband with an expression of good humor.—Then adding, in a louder tone—

'Did you hear that, Mr. Clarence?'

'No. What is it?' asked her husband, and the company with himself turned to hear the sentiment to which his attention had been called.

'Mrs. Lee, here,' replied Mrs. Clarence, laughing, 'has asserted that husbands in this country are too dictutional to their wives, and seem to think the doctrine of implicit obedience the only true one. I tell her that I believe there is a little tendency toward the fault she charges upon them. But as none should be condemned unheard. I call upon Mr. Lee and yourself to take up the cause of husbands in general, and defend it. What say you?'

'First prove your assertion, ladies,' Mr. Clarence responded, with an affectation of gravity.

'O, that can be proved easily enough,' spoke up Mrs. Lee, with some spirit. 'All men cleared enough asinine in their actions toward their wives that they expect to govern—to have their wills the law of the house. I will appeal to Mrs. Clarence, if she is not in the habit of doing very many things simply because her husband wishes them done, without herself deciding whether they are proper to be done or not?'

'And pray what better reason could she have, Fanny?' asked Mrs. Woodman.

'What better reason, Mrs. Woodman? Why, a great deal better reason. Her own rational decision that the thing was right. Reasoning Mr. Lee were to tell me to jump into the river, is that any reason why I should do it?'

'If you and he were on board of a boat that was on fire, and he were to tell you to jump into the river with him, I should certainly think that you ought to do so at once, trusting in his calmer judgment to decide for your safety, and in his strength to support you upon the bosom of the water. So in all the relations of life, as man reasons closer than woman, and sees actions in the wider range of their effects, the wife should look mainly to him for direction, and be willing to be guided by his decisions in matters of importance. Not blindly and passively, but rationally.'

'I should like to know, very much, how a woman can act rationally, at the same time that she acts from another's judgment, or whim, if it so be, and not upon her own perception of right.'

'I will tell you, Fanny,' resumed Mrs. Woodman, 'if you will listen to me attentively. I have before tried to make you understand the important relation that a man and his wife ought to bear to each other. To make you apprehend the differences that, united, constitute them one.'

'But I must confess that all you advanced was Greek to me,' Fanny said, interrupting her.

'Go on, if you please, Mrs. Woodman,' spoke up Lee, with an evident rebuke of Fanny in his tones—a rebuke perceived and felt, at least by her.

'I have before conversed with Fanny on this subject, but at a time when she thought more about getting married than she did about its true relations,' Mrs. Woodman said, in resuming her remarks, to which all listened with attention and deep interest. 'I was anxious, before she took upon herself the duties of a wife, that she should truly comprehend a wife's position and duties. I tried to show her how both man and woman were imperfect, until united so as to form, in conjunction, one man. And now, in this union, two minds could act in such harmony as to form, as it were, a single mind.'

'But failed to satisfy her, I presume,' Mr. Lee said, with a tone and manner understood by at least one person present.

'She was too happy in the thought of becoming your wife, Harvey, to be able to comprehend any nice metaphysical distinctions,' Mrs. Woodman replied. 'And moreover, she was willing to trust to love, as the best teacher that a wife can have. But, perhaps, her mind may now be able to perceive, what at that time seemed difficult of apprehension.'

'Some of the rest of us may; so give us the benefit of your wisdom and experience,' Mr. Lee said to this.

'The true nature of the marriage relation seems but little understood,' Mrs. Woodman remarked; 'and because not understood, fruitless and never-ending contentions for supremacy too often arise. Or, a passive submission to dictation takes place, utterly destructive of the reciprocal confidence and respect that should ever exist between married partners. Some hold that the man and the woman are equal—others, that the woman is inferior to man, and must ever look up to him, and meekly submit to his arbitrary control. But neither of them truly estimate the relative positions of man and wife.'

'Whatever difference there is, must be an original and radical difference,' remarked Mr Clarence.

'Of course. A difference originally constituted by the Creator when man was made, male and female. And this difference continues and will continue to exist, whether it be truly seen and appreciated or not. Happy are they, however, who both see and appreciate it.'

'And what, Mrs. Woodman, do you consider this conjoining difference?' asked Mr. Clarence.

'The man is more in the region of the understanding which appertains to wisdom, than the woman.'

'O yes, I can readily see that,' was the reply of Mr. Clarence.

'Well, I must confess that I cannot see any such thing,' Fanny rejoined compressing her lips and tossing her head with an air of contempt.

'And the woman more in the region of the will which appertains to love,' continued Mrs. Woodman, not seeming to notice Fanny's remark,

'Yes, I believe I can see that too,' Mr. Clarence said.

'A little reflection will make this apparent,' resumed Mrs. Woodman. 'Men in all countries, are distinguished for the strength of their understandings, as seen in the fact that they are engaged in performing the various uses to society that require reasoning and judgement. As, for instance, they attend to the affairs of government, and manage all the complicated machinery of national intercourse. They also engage in those severe abstract and scientific studies whose require minds the most profound to compass an elucidation. On the other hand, in all periods and in all nations, woman has left and still leaves the broad arena where man contends with man for the intellectual mastery, content to find her delight in those parents that develop the heart's purest and gentlest affections.—Neither the one nor the other moves in his or her sphere from the accident of circumstances. A law, deep laid in the fundamental principles of being, governs this difference of position and difference of pursuit. Each acts from the step-line of a differently constituted mind. In the one the [illegible] standing rules, and in the other the will—

'O, that can be proved easily enough,' spoke up Mrs. Lee, with some spirit. 'All men cleared enough asinine in their actions toward their wives that they expect to govern—to have their wills the law of the house. A law, deep laid in the fundamental principles of being, governs this difference of position and difference of pursuit. Each acts from the step-line of a differently constituted mind. In the one the [illegible] standing rules, and in the other the will—

And, as the understanding and the will united make man, so the man, in whom is an understanding, and the woman, in whom is no understanding and a will, but who in most is the region of the will, or that which relates to the affections, when united, make a more perfect man.'

'A beautiful theory, truly, Mrs. Woodman,' Mr. Clarence said, with evident delight, 'but go on; I see that you have more to say.'

'Now man, from the leading characteristic of his mind, is in the love of growing wise and therefore is in the constant exercise of his understanding, in order to discriminate between the true and the false, and all for the sake of ultimate action, for the doing of something is the end of all reasonings.'

'Well?'

'And woman, or rather a wife, if truly a wife, is in the love of her husband's wisdom.'

'I cannot see that so clearly, Mrs. Woodman,'

'She must love something in her husband?'

'Of course.'

'And if the love of growing wise be the ruling principle in his mind, will not her love of his wisdom tend to unite them as one, more than anything else? For, in that case, she will see truth in his mind as in a mirror, and love it because it is there. And the more and more he seeks after wisdom, and the wiser he becomes, the more of a conjoining principle will there be in his mind; for she, being in the love of her husband's wisdom, and he in the love of growing wise, the conjoining principle must become daily stronger and stronger.'

'Until she becomes a mere nothing. A kind of fungus excrescence to her husband,' Mrs. Lee said.

A laugh went round the circle at this sally, in which all joined but Mr. Lee and Mrs. Woodman.

'No, Fanny, not a mere fungus excrescence, as you lightly term it,' replied the latter; 'but truly a woman, because in her right place.'

'Certainly I never can and never will subscribe to such a doctrine of difference between the sexes.'

'Why not, Fanny?'

'For the plain and simple reason that it makes the woman nothing, out of the man. He is to grow wise, and she is to love his wisdom, for-ooth! What, pray, are those poor creatures to do, who have fools for husbands? And a precious number there are in that unfortunate predicament.'

'If a woman,' replied Mrs. Woodman, gravely, 'finds herself in the condition you name, she may be very certain that in marrying she has not been influenced by right motives. She not being won by the attractiveness of intellectual and moral beauty, but by some mere personal, and perhaps selfish considerations. But, even she would act a much wiser part by endeavoring to strengthen and support her husband's rational mind, that somewhere might be found there to conjoin them as one, than by taking the reins in her own hand. In the latter case she would soon find herself, doubtless, in the predicament of Phaeton when he attempted to drive the chariot of the Sun.'

'Well answered,' was the low, emphatic, and somewhat exciting remark of Mr. Lee.

'No doubt you think so, Harvey,' replied his wife, in what all present but her husband thought to be a tone of mock seriousness.

'In regard to Fanny's objection,' resumed Mrs. Woodman, 'that it makes the woman nothing, out of the man, I would remark that no woman who is married, and who truly loves her husband, feels herself to be in possession of a cipher, and yet, she is daily conscious that she lives in her husband—and, that separate from him, or in the effort to act out of, and independent of him, she has no power.'

'And yet, how often do we see wives, whose husbands are absent for longer or shorter periods, acting wisely and well in all the relations of life, independent of their lords and masters,' Mrs. Lee rejoined.

'Go and question them. Fanny, upon the subject,' Mrs. Woodman said, 'and their confession will be, that it is from their husbands' rational minds that they are still acting. That they think, almost involuntarily, whenever anything is to be done,—'Would he act in this way if at home?'—Or, 'How will this appear to him?' And to them it seems right, just in the degree that it appears to accord with what their husbands would approve were they present.'

'As to that, I am sure I cannot say whether it is so or not, for I have never placed in such circumstances,' was Mrs. Lee's unconvinced reply. 'But this much I can say, I utterly reject your doctrine, as striking at the root of woman's true rights and privileges—and as leading to sink her into a mere appendage to man.'

'But you must remember, Fanny,' added Mrs. Woodman, 'that she is as necessary to man's perfection of character, as he is to hers. Together they form one truly effective man.'

'As I told you before, that is all Greek,' Fanny persisted in saying. 'And I, for one, subscribe to no doctrine that my own mind does not rationally apprehend.'

'None are so blind as those who will not see,' Mr. Lee, who felt really irritated at the tone and manner of his wife's remarks, said, with a severity unperceived by any but himself, except it was Mrs. Woodman, who had her own reasons for fearing that all was not right. Satisfied, too, from the exhibition of both the husband's and the wife's temper, that the subject had been better be dropped, she managed, determinedly, to change the conversation to something lighter and more agreeable to all.

After their visitors had all departed, and Mr. and Mrs. Lee were left alone, the happiest young couple in the whole circle of their acquaintance, so thought most of the company, they seated themselves in moody silence and with oppressed feelings each prepared to take fire at any [illegible] which the other might make, that was in the highest degree [illegible]

'I never heard Mrs. Woodman [illegible] so bitterly as to-night,' Fanny [illegible] without saying, that brushing silence.

'And I was never more pleased in my life,' said the proud Colonel.

'Of course you were gratified.' This time Ada half assentingly. 'All men are pleased with decisions that justify the every day act of putting women below them.'

'Fanny, you must not talk to me in that way.'

'And why not, pray? Because I am your wife, are my lips to be sealed? Must I not dare to give utterance to the truth? Perish the thought! I ought die, rather than become cold a slave-spirited slave to any man-tyrant the earth ever saw!'

The voice of Mrs. Lee trembled with ill-suppressed passion, while her face glowed, and her eyes flattered fire. Her husband saw that she was, for the moment, beside herself, but he felt too much irritated to make allowance for her, or to guard himself.

'One thing is certain, Fanny,' said he spoke coolly and deliberately, to all appearance—'if you live with me, you have got to know your place and keep it.'

'Then, I will not live with you!' was the equally cool and equally emphatic answer; and so saying, she arose from the chair upon which she was sitting, and strode from the room with a firm and determined step.

Although Lee regretted his words the moment after they were uttered, yet his pride would not suffer him to recall them. Nor did he take over a movement to follow his wife, to endeavor to soothe the wild tumult of her feelings. For a few minutes, he could hear her moving about in her chamber overhead, and then all became still as if she had retired to bed.

Throwing himself at length upon a sofa, he determined to pass the night where he was. After an hour's gloomy and troubled thought, Lee sank away into a profound slumber, from which he did not awake until day dawn.

THE TROUBLES.

Times of unwonted excitement, though not unduly, have prevailed for a few days. The news received from time to time being very conflicting. At one time we would receive the most favorable telegrams, and in an hour or so the very opposite. This state of uncertainty has prevailed since nearly the very first of our hearing of the invasion.—That they shall be able to effect anything toward the liberation(?) of Ireland by an uncalled for invasion of this Province, is the most sheer folly, and exhibits a degree of ignorance rarely to be met with. They are neither able to take Canada nor to hold it if they had it, and nothing but madness or folly would induce them to attempt it. The reception they met at their first attempt is but a trifle to the next one, and if the American Government will but forbid their returning to American soil, they shall be duly dealt with by our forces. But to expect justice or fair treatment from our neighbors, is too much; all along they have been encouraging the farce—encouraging them by their presence, their money and secret connivance. They not only failed to perform one of the plainest duties, namely, to prevent the escape of the murderers, but permitted continuous bands of them to pass over without let or hindrance; but these have come to grief in an incredibly short time, and the poor Fenians have showed themselves no better soldiers when fighting for Ireland now than at any period of past history. The fact is they require a different element to ensure success, and they require a cause for war. Their cause is a bad one, and cannot be successful. The duty of our people now is to put their shoulders to,gether, and the Govern ent we trust will act determinedly also, and give Fenianism a blow, wherever it makes its appearance, such as shall sicken the deluded dupes. A few months will end the whole farce. Americans will very soon get tired of the annoyance of watching them, and instead of saving them by unjust and unlawful means, will leave them to their fate; soon then they will be brought to their right senses and after receiving a few severe punishments for their insolence they will betake them to their former employments of being hewers of wood and drawers of water for their Yankee masters.

Ireland they never can free, nor will it ever to free till it spews them out and is peopled by a race of men that will till her fertile soil and receive the fruit of their labour—abundance, and allow their neighbors to dwell at peace and in safety. But this cannot be expected until the doomed race that curses her verdant hills be destroyed or removed in the spirit of their mind. The curses of both Cain and Canaan seem to light upon them wherever they go, nor does it appear that they shall be removed till their land becomes the possessions of strangers, as is fast becoming the case, and until they become fugitives and vagabonds on the earth, as is the case with those who are now in the United States; they have left their own country, or have been expelled by idleness and want, and as the Hon. Mr. McGee shows, have not obtained a foot, so to speak, of the soil to which they have betaken themselves. Do they not see or will they not learn that they are but hastening their own destruction by the ruinous course they are pursuing? Ireland now contains less of them by 2,500,000 than a few years ago. For their wickedness their land is being given to strangers.

Some of our contemporaries have been obliged to issue half-sheets; only for the energy of one of our heads we would be to the same predicament. It is all with and no play just now.

FENIANS.

This unparalleled rumbug, which for some time appeared to be dying out or dead, has revived a little, and in the most murderous, fiendish manner they have received the Privates at an unprotected point—Fort Erie being chosen by them as the first place to attack. It must be remembered that this place, once formidable and protected, is now nothing more than a little village, nothing like a fort or works of defence existing. The people there, although in close proximity to the American coast, lived without fear or molestation for many years. On Friday last, however, the news reached Toronto of the Fenians assembling in Buffalo, and of their attempt to invade Canada in that direction. During the night about 1,500 passed over, taking with them 2,500 stand of arms and ammunition; some at once began to plunder, and a few to cast up trenches, as if determined to make a foot-hold on Canadian soil. These highway robbers and murderers took such things from the inhabitants of the country where they were as they desired, offering bonds of the banking Republic as payment, which the citizens scorned to touch. It is somewhat gratifying to learn that at least one of them was made to lick the dust, by the owner of a horse which the Fenigan was about to take.

As soon as the news reached Toronto and Hamilton, some regulars and a few companies of Volunteers were sent forward to the scene, and, sad to relate, some of the brave Volunteers have fallen in their impatiently to drive the vandals from our soil. At least four men of the Queen's Own, of Toronto, have fallen, and forty-one have been wounded.

On Friday our brave Volunteers left this to take part in the struggle, if required.—They all were in the best of spirits, not a murmur being heard at leaving, at about one hour's warning. Capt. Leigh, of Lakefield company, had his men here in a most incredible short time—taking scarcely four hours to go to Lakefield assemble his company and report at Peterboro, to proceed on the train with the other companies that are around the town. Immense throngs of people crowded the station to witness their departure, and many a fervent prayer was uttered for their success and safe return.

On Saturday most conflicting telegrams were received from various quarters; the streets were crowded with anxious enquirers; the telegraph office was literally besieged to hear the first news, and this continued up to one or two o'clock at night. At length the news reached us that several thousand Fenians had effected a landing and that the brave Volunteers had nobly attacked the outlaws, and at least brought them to a stand still. At Ridgeway, a place about three or four miles from Fort Erie, the Queen's Own first fell in with them, and had a severe struggle as the Fenians were in a bush and fired on our men as they advanced. The Volunteers fought while their ammunition lasted and then retired. The force against them were more than four to one; and at Waterloo another brush took place with Col. Dennis, where they were more than nine to one; yet the Volunteers fought while they had ammunition. At this place 850 Fenians attacked a small company of about 70, and of course drove them back, but not until the Volunteers had no means of defending themselves. As the Fenians did not attack in a body, but in twos and threes, from fence to fence and from behind buildings and other defences, there was no chance of applying the steel to them. They, however, did not wait for a union of our forces, but at an early hour began to re-embark and return to the American side.

DISGRACEFUL CONDUCT OF AMERICAN CITIZENS.

During the time of these encounters thousands of American citizens lined the shore near Buffalo, watching the engagement and cheering vociferously for the plunderers, waving handkerchiefs and showing signs of rejoicing as the few Volunteers were driven back. The American authorities too, were very careless, as they allowed bands of Fenians to pass to Canada all day, and afterwards allowed several hundreds of these vagabonds to effect their escape, when they could have prevented them. Nice returns for our efforts to save their soil from the hands of their own outlaws, who sought to plunder and rob their country during their rebellion; now they allow bands of armed murderers, vagabonds, and raggamuffins to enter our country and rob and murder, and look on with complacence. What a civilised people they must be, where they allow rascallions to concoct their schemes of blood on their soil, whose they attend their assemblies, and lend their aid in the way of subscriptions, as it is reported that the Captain of the U. S. steam tug Michigan, lying at Buffalo, gave them one hundred dollars a few evenings before they made their attack.

So far the plot has been unsuccessful.—The place around Fort Erie is again free; several Fenians have been taken prisoners, and not a few have paid the penalty of their rashness in meeting our forces. The Americans are said to have 700 prisoners, who, surely, will be given up to us, and if so, the country will demand their blood.

From the different reports, the following details appear as correct as can be given:—

On the last night of May about 1,340 Fenians passed from Buffalo and effected a landing at Fort Erie, there being nothing to oppose them. They brought with them 2,500 stand of arms, and no doubt had more on the side before them, as 12 cases of arms were seized on board the Mary Merrit in the canal. The marauders took up their position at several places, but principally at Fort Erie and Ridgeway about three or four miles distant, they also extended scouts as far as 4 or 5 miles along the country toward Port Colborne, and in other directions.—They were under command of one Gen. O'Neil—Sweeney not being present. They also fortified themselves at Back Creek.

The forces sent against them were from Toronto, Hamilton and other intermediate villages, consisting of regulars of the 16th and 47th regiments, and volunteers. Through some mismanagement the volunteers and the regulars did not concentrate their forces as soon as intended, and the volunteers alone and Col. Booker meeting the Fenians at Bridgeway, had an encounter, in which, at first, the Fenians were driven back, but some mistake in orders induced the volunteers to retreat; their ammunition was also wasted when the Fenians renewed the attack. Here the brave volunteers, the Queen's Own from Toronto, lost some of their comrades and several wounded.—About the same time or shortly after the Fenians 600 strong, attacked Col. Dennis at Waterloo with 70 men. Here also the volunteers, who had only 40 rounds of ammunition, fought till it was wasted, and then were forced to retire. Some daring exploits being recorded in these encounters. All this time the regulars and artillery were near Chippewa and never got into the action. In the different encounters the Fenians had the advantage, being as Ridgeway 4 to 1, and at Waterloo more than 9 to 1. Our forces took over 200 prisoners, and at latest accounts more were coming in. These will receive the reward of their crime. Shortly after these attacks the Fenians hearing that our regulars were coming up and fearing an encounter with them thought it best to retire, and accordingly on Saturday night made their escape—except stragglers and contrivers who did not receive warning in time. The U. S. steam tug Michigan intercepted 400 or 500 of them and kept them awaiting further orders. The dead of our brave fellows have been brought to Toronto and are buried, the greatest sympathy being manifested towards those who have lost their relatives in the unlucky affray. The wounded have been partly conveyed to St. Catherines and other places and are being cared for. The prisoners who fell into the hands of the Fenians got their liberty when they were forced to retire to the land of mock freedom. Some of the forces that were there are now at Brockville or Prescott ready to meet any attack that may be made from that quarter. The greatest activity prevails everywhere and we feel confident that arrangements are such as to prevent a recurrence of the sad events of Fort Erie.

LATEST REPORTS.

CORNWALL.

Almost as soon as the news from Fort Erie reached us, we received information of an expected attack on Cornwall, and that defensive preparations were being made to meet them if they dared to make the attempt. Consequent on the news from Fort Erie and the expected attack, great anxiety prevailed to learn particulars. For the satisfaction of those who may be uneasy, we learn that a sufficient force is now at both Cornwall and Prescott, to repel the Fenian outlaws.—There are 300 of the 60th Regiment; Ottawa Battery numbering 136; the left wing of the 25th, from Quebec, 650 strong; and 500 Riflemen; or a force of over 2000, well prepared and ready to give them a terrible reception. The great trouble at the latest reports was to find provisions, everything had been so disposed of before to meet the American demand of late.

MALONE,

The place of the Fenian rendezvous in the East, is about 29 miles from Cornwall, on the Plattsburg and Ogdensburg Railway.—There is no railway communication with Cornwall. Large bodies of Fenians congregated there during Saturday and succeeding days. They occupy an old U. S. barracks and a Roman Catholic Church. It is reported that a foundry has been hired and that bomb-shells are to be manufactured there. They are to move direct on Canada, on the arrival of arms.

ST. ALBANS.

On Monday there were about 1000 Fenians at this place, but they left for other parts, except a few. Our force in that direction is believed to be sufficient for every event.

THE CAMP AT FORT ERIE.

On the 4th, several American citizens visited the camp at Fort Erie and spoke in the most friendly terms and remarked the the Fenians were rightly considered as invaders, and declared that the sympathies of all right thinking men were with them, and pledged the co-operation to the fullest extent of the U. S. army. On the 4th, at Buffalo, 2000 muskets were seized.

A list of the raiders killed and wounded, as in the Globe of Tuesday, is given at about 21. A Roman Catholic priest is amongst them. 700 have been captured by U. S. gun boat Michigan. The following officers have been recognized as on board:—Col. John O'Neil, Col. Owen Starr, Col. John Hoy, Lieut. Col. Grace, Lieut. Col. John Spaulding, Captains Shields, Connolly, P. H. Mundy, Tim O'Leary, John A. Geary, Fogarty, Smith, and John Haggerty; Lieutenants Roche, Wm. Maguire, Pat. Flynn, and J. J. Tyrrell.

About 200 prisoners have been taken, some of them are in the Toronto jail, others are in the Welland jail. With difficulty could the crowds of spectators be restrained from lynching them as they passed with the Volunteers to their confinement. Such is the feeling towards these miserable miscreants.

Col. Peacock's Brigade consists of right wing of the 16th regiment, 350 men and 16 officers; a part of the 47th regiment, containing 380 men and 18 officers; Welland Volunteers, 350 men and 30 officers; Royal Artillery, 90 horses, 200 men and 4 officers; Foot Artillery, 42 men and 3 officers, and the York Cavalry, under Major Denison, consisting of about 50 men. This force, however, never got into action. The Fenians being driven from the field by the Volunteers.

The garrison at London is largely augmented.

A Despatch from Cincinnati, states that 45,000 rounds of ammunition were shipped from that place for New York, and 150,000 to Chicago, and 30,000 muskets to Buffalo, within a few days, all for the Fenians.

All the Fenians have the Bradensburg Philadelphia rifle—an excellent arm—bearing the United States stamp. About eight hundred of these rifles were destroyed by them on Friday, as they had more than they needed.

Sixty-one Fenian prisoners were taken to Welland gaol by the steamer W. T. Robb, and safely locked up.

(From the Globe's Correspondent.)

QUEBEC, June 3.

The news from the front creates a great deal of excitement.

The Volunteers were aroused at day break and mustered a thousand strong.

At half past 3 this p.m., the Royal Artillery were pulled from church, and after being provided with two days rations and the necessary equipments for the field, proceeded by special train.

One of H. M. frigates, lying off here, took her departure for Montreal. The military authorities have employed a good many steamboats belonging to the St. Lawrence Tow-boat Company, to carry ammunition to the west. The steamer Hercules took on board from the frigate Aurora several pieces of ammunition, and proceeded at noon for the lakes. The Aurora has despatched a large number of marines for Montreal.

The Levis Volunteers turned out to a man, and are in readiness for the fray.

Crowds of people have collected at the printing offices, and the news that a large number of Fenians were captured and the balance routed from our soil gladdened the hearts of our people so much that three hearty cheers were given for the success of our forces.

THE RICHMOND'S PASSENGER.

We take the following from the Buffalo Express of yesterday:—

"The disposition to be made of the Michigan's captives has been the subject of much public speculation, of much anxiety in Fenian circles and of considerable telegraphic correspondence between here and Washington. As the result of the latter, we may state that General Barry has instructions both from Secretary Seward and the Secretary of War to hold the prisoners at all hazards, until further orders. In being deemed on with the guarding them available, to bring them on land, where an attempt might be made to rescue them, they have been kept through the night on board the boat on which they were captured, moored at the piers of the Michigan, so crowded upon the narrow deck that their situation must be exceedingly uncomfortable. Gen. O'Neil and all the officers are on board the Michigan.

"Contrary to the general notion prevailing yesterday, upon which a great deal of law and logic were wasted, there has been no demand made by the Canadian authorities for the surrender of these prisoners, and the question whether they shall be given up to Canada or held as violaters of the neutrality laws of the United States has not been raised at all. It is undoubtedly to vindicate its own outraged laws that the government has seized them."

BUFFALO, June 3rd.

A reporter of the Express has furnished a list of prisoners taken by the Fenians—29 of the Enfield Welland Battery, commanded by Capt. King and 22 of the 13th Battalion and Queen's Own.

With reference to the above we have it on good authority, that Captain King had his men and battery on a tug guarding the ferry and Fort Erie. He took some 80 Fenians prisoners. About 2 o'clock the battery landed at the wharf, and just at the time the Fenians arrived there from before Col. Booker's column, and made an onslaught on the little band when a severe struggle took place, the gallant King falling, but we have since heard that his life will be spared with the loss of the lower part of the leg.—Hamilton Spectator.

News from Various Quarters Yesterday.

Ogdensburg.—Lines were all cut last night.

Malone.—Wires are cut in two places north of Potsdam.

St. Albans.—All the Fenians have gone north.

St. Armand.—The Fenians are all breaking up and selling their [illegible] as low as $1 each.

Watertown.—Large bodies of Fenians are passing north on every train.

An attack is expected every hour on Cornwall.

Ottawa.—The Times advises the proclamation of Martial Law, and it is supposed it will be declared, as there are a few sympathisers there.

Cornwall.—Information in the hands of the Military authorities says, that the camp at Malone are moving to Bombay, about 8 miles from Cornwall. The greatest precautions are taken to destroy the whole army of cut throats.

Chicago—Fifty Canadians there gave up their employment, and have returned to Toronto and tendered their services to the Government for the defence of their native country.

Prescott.—Two car loads of Fenian arms were seized by the U. S. authorities at Rushville and brought to Ogdensburg. They are worth two and a half millions of dollars.—Everything is quiet. All long for a dash at the Fenians.

Hamilton.—The Queen's Own are removed to Stratford under sealed orders.

Buffalo.—There are rumours of an attack on Port Colborne. The U. S. gun boat Fessenden is on the lake to prevent it.

Fort Erie.—The steam tug Robb is patrolling the river six miles up. There are a few Fenians at Frenchman's Creek, they are firing on the trains as they pass.

The Deputy U. S. Marshal of Buffalo seized twenty boxes of rifles and a field piece.

At Sandwich, reports of the Fenians having crossed and landed near that place was false. So also reports of having landed near Goderich was false.

Great sympathy is everywhere manifested concerning the killed in the late raid. The list given in the Leader is 6 killed and 24 wounded, but there are others not yet reported.

The Globe says that never has so imposing a funeral as that of the gallant braves of the Queen's Own been seen in the city.

Of the 500 taken in their attempt to get out of the way of our troops, over 200, it is said, have been allowed to drop into the water and swim to shore. What is to be done with the remainder is not yet made known.

The Fenians are stealing arms from the United States arsenals. Are they not rather allowed to take them?

Peterborough Volunteers were taken to Kingston yesterday morning. Several letters have been received from them. They were all well, and in good spirits, longing for a dash at the Sogers of Ireland—Sweeny's cut-throats.

WHAT WILL BE DONE WITH THE PRISONERS?—From the Globe of Tuesday, there appears a probability that those murderous outlaws who desecrated our soil and caused the lives of those gallant few who went to drive them off, will be tried by Court Martial, and summarily dealth with. There being no hope for any of the party except one. We add the sooner they are brought to judgment the better. They are murderers, let them pay the penalty of the crime.

We regret to learn that Captain King, of the Welland Battery—brother of our respected townsman, Mr. King, Principal of Grammar and Union School—lost a foot in the action under Colonel Dennis, and private information received by Mr. King, on Tuesday morning, says that he is in a very precarious state, not likely to recover.

A son of P. M. Grover, Esq., of Norwood, is also among the wounded.

O'NEIL'S SWORD.—Some citizen in the neighbourhood of Fort Erie is said to have found O'Neil's sword in a fence corner, and says it has been identified. He is about to present it to the Queen's Own, as a trophy. This sword is said to belong to the Guerilla John Morgan, said to have been captured by Morgan.

LOYAL INDIANS.—A large number of the Six Nation Indians from the Grand River, as soon as they heard of the Fenian outrage, proceeded to Hamilton and offered their services; they were endeavoring to procure arms and ammunition to take the field.—The number was upwards of 500.

YANKEE REPORTS.—A Buffalo paper announced that the Fenians took the colors of the Queen's Own. The Globe says they never had any. What smart fellows these reporters must be.

The Escape of the Prisoners who have been taken.

(From the Leader.)

James Diamond, a young man of twenty-two, dressed in the prevailing fashion among "roughs" in American cities, and in reply to inquiries—I live in New York and am a moulder. I visited Buffalo last week on business, and while there, some excitement arose on the opposite side of the river. Having an uncle living at Fort Erie I was afraid that he might get into trouble, and so concluded to pay him a visit. I went over on Sunday and was there but a short time when I was taken by the soldiers. I had a pass from the consul, but lost it, and then I was sent on here. I am no Fenian and never belonged to their army. I took no part in any fighting. (Our reporter at this stage saw how it was likely to be with all those whom he was about to interrogate, and accordingly, instead of asking them "To what regiment of Fenians do you belong?" changed the query to "What relative were you visiting at Fort Erie?" or, with a faint attempt at jocoseness, to "Was it the pursuit of pleasure that brought you to Canada?")

John Smith, a bold youth of twenty, rather sullen in manner and untamed in aspect, said—I have no particular residence. The last place I lived in was Nashville, Tenn. I was in the American army for a short time. I came up from Nashville with the Fenians, and visited Fort Erie with them but do not belong to them. I was there simply as a spectator in search of amusement. I was not in the fight and had no arms whatever.

Patrick Connors—I am twenty-four years old and came from New York. I work as a deck hand on a steamboat. I was visiting a friend near Fort Erie when captured. I don't know what it was for, because, although I was there, I know nothing about the Fenians. I did not belong to their army.

Patrick Donohue—I live on Main street, Buffalo, and am 27 years of age. I am a painter by trade. I crossed over from Buffalo to the Canada side to see what was going on, not to do any fighting. I am not a fighting character, but a man of peace.

William Hayden—I belong to Louisville, Ky., and am a deck hand on a Mississippi river steamer. I am twenty years old. I visited Fort Erie with the Fenian—not to fight, but to make a friendly call upon a relative. I was not engaged in any fighting.

James McDonough—Buffalo is my residence, and I work there as a painter. I am 26 years of age. I went to Fort Erie on Sunday, and was arrested soon after getting there by the red coats, who did not tell me what it was for. A Fenian? No, never.

Henry Marvin—I live on Hudson street, Buffalo, and am forty-two years of age. I went over in a small boat to the Canadian shore on Sunday and was taken soon afterwards. I did not go there to fight and am not a Fenian.

Daniel Foley, twenty-three years of age—I live at Buffalo and crossed over with Marvin on Sunday morning. I can't tell what they arrested me for, because I was not in the fight. I am a ship carpenter.

Patrick McGrath—I live in Brooklyn. I came with the Fenians when they crossed to Canada, but only to see what was going on. I was arrested twice. The first time was on Saturday, when I was searched, examined and let go; and then on Sunday I was again taken, but not let go. I can't imagine what they want with me, because they said they were satisfied when they discharged me the first time. Of course, I'm not a Fenian. I am a fireman on a steamboat on the East river, and thirty years old.

James Bell—I live at Fort Erie and lots of people there know me. I was arrested yesterday between the village and the station. I never belonged to the Fenians. I am twenty-six years of age and a sailor on the lakes.

Thomas Davis—I am nineteen; reside in Cincinnati, and am an engineer—running a stationery engine. I came to Buffalo to find work, but it was scarce there. I took a look at Fort Erie. There were not many openings there, and I was just thinking of returning when I was taken and forced to come this way. Were you ever told that I was a Fenian—I guess not?

Patrick O'Neil—I came along with the Fenians from Cincinnati, and belonged to Capt. Donohoe's company. I was in the fight back of Fort Erie. I am a marble polisher by trade and eighteen years old. When will you bring me up for trial? (This was the only prisoner who admitted candidly that he belonged to the marauding band. He is quite a boy, and appeared the least reckless of the gang.)

James Spalding—I live in Cinci—no, Buffalo, and am a painter. I went to Fort Erie along with a friend of mine to see the sights of the place. They took me for a suspicious character and so arrested me, but I don't know what they can bring against me. I am forty-eight years old, and am a single man.

John Quinn—I belong to Buffalo and am a sailor on the propeller Burlington. I left off work on Saturday and went over to Fort Erie. On Sunday morning at four o'clock, before I could get back, I was arrested and brought before an officer, who discharged me after hearing what I had to say. However, I was again arrested two hours afterwards, and here I am. I am thirty-two years old.

John Gallagher—I came from Cincinnati, but live in Phillipsburg, N J. I make a living by pipe moulding. I started with the Fenians from Cincinnati, but the night before last, not liking their "goings on," I deserted from them and gave myself up into the hands of the British yesterday morning. I am only nineteen years of age, though I may look older.

Michael Shannon—I was twenty-three my last birthday. I live in Cincinnati and am a laboring man, but I have worked in Buffalo for two or three months past. I only went over to Fort Erie after the skirmish was over on Saturday, and the Fenians would not let me back. I had to stay there till yesterday, when I was arrested. I am not a Fenian.

John Rogan—I am thirty four years old and a sailor on the lakes, belonging to Oswego. I was simply on a cruise to Fort Erie when the Fenians happened to be there, and not making sail fast enough when they were leaving I was overhauled. But I had nothing to do with them.

Patrick Horton—I am a laborer from Cincinnati, twenty-three years old, and came from that city to work on the railroad. I left there on Saturday and gave myself up to the British soldiers. I was in the fight at the village that afternoon and was wounded in the forehead over the right eye and also had my left fore-finger partly shot away. I don't know how it happened exactly, but I think the wound in my head was from a rifle. There was a volunteer officer there who kept firing a revolver at us, and it was one of his shots, I think, that wounded me in the hand. How did the volunteers fight? Well. I didn't see much of them. (This prisoner was dressed in something resembling a uniform. He wore a pair of light pants, a green baize or serge vest or jacket, with an American infantry soldier's coat, and twirled in his uninjured hand a long-peaked cap similar to those worn by Federal soldiers. He looked down rather ruefully at his clothes and admitted reluctantly that he had on the "Fenian uniform.")

Timothy Kiely—I worked on a steamboat running between St. Louis and New Orleans. Times got dull and a few of us thought we would come up to the lakes and see if we could get anything to do. When I reached Buffalo the Fenians were crossing over to Fort Erie, and I followed them out of curiosity. I went up to the bush with them on Saturday morning, and while the firing was going on there I got shot through the muscle of the left arm. I was not fighting at the time and never had a gun in my hand, but just standing beside a man I had met at Fort Erie who persuaded me to go up with him. (This prisoner has his arm in a sling, but does not suffer very severly from his wound.)

Thomas Cosup—I am an apprentice machinist from Buffalo, and twenty-one years of age. I was out with the Fenians and had no hand in the fight.

The Rev. John McMahon was the last in the line of prisoners. He was dressed in the garb of a priest—that is, a long black coat without a cassock, and a clerical band around his neck. He is a medium sized man, wearing long steel-gray hair brushed back from his forehead, with a nervous, tremulous and wistful expression in his face, and without a sharp and scrutinizing glance. In answer to the enquiry how it was that he was found in such goodly company—a man of peace amongst a band of cut-throats—he said—I am parish priest of Anderson, Madison country, Indiana. I am forty-eight years old and have been in America twenty-five of them. I was on my way to Montreal to look after a legacy left by my brother who died there when I got among the Fenians. Having arrived at Buffalo I crossed over to Fort Erie in the progress of my journey, when they took me prisoner. They took my travelling bag from me, my vestments and cloak, and I was waiting to get them back when they compelled me to act as chaplain. When the battle was over I was called upon to the confessions of the dying men and administer the rites to them. I bandaged the wounds of the injured, the British as well as the others, and did what I could to relieve the suffering. When the troops came to fort Erie they took me prisoner, but I protest I was with the Fenians against my will. I was on my way to Montreal and they made me stay with them. I have always opposed and preached against them.

This ended the interview. The prisoners nearly all of whom spoke without any Irish "brogue," appeared glad to give their names and residence in order that their friends might know of their whereabouts. Although they stoutly denied any connection with the raid they occasionally let slip expressions which told of their having conspired against our peace and welfare, of their having lain in ambush for our brave youth, and of their having coolly and deliberately taken the lives of those who had never given them cause of complaint and who had always accorded the same liberties and privileges to others which they enjoyed themselves.

All the prisoners, with one exception, are Roman Catholics.

The old jail was prepared yesterday after noon for the reception of more prisoners from the Niagara district. They where expected to arrive last night, but up to a late hour had not been brought in.

Mr. McGee on the Fenians.

We have almost ceased to take an interest in those redoubtable heroes, the Fenians. The only thing we hear of them now-a-days is, that the customhouse officers along the line are making a good thing out of the Roberts and Sweeny consignments of arms to frontier ports. It would be a characteristic denouement of the whole 'arc' if the arms seized should be sold by Mr. McCulloch's order at auction, at Rouse's Point, Oswego, Erie, &c., and and if they are, the Canadians should buy them in! One does not wonder so much at the abject ignorance of the social, political and military condition of Canada exhibited by General Sweeny, his senate and staff, as at their geographical ignorance of his country, which would shame a schoolboy of ten years old. Why, if they had Montreal and Quebec both, they could still be, as the former over 500, and as the latter over 700 miles, inland from the Atlantic. And if they ever got as far east as the Gulf, they might as well, like old Virginia in the vanguard, jump into a bottle and give England the cork. Every one knows the gulf to be a closed sea with two narrow outlets, the gut of Canso and the Strait of Belleisle, which a single ship-of-war or two could cork up hermetically. If Mr Sweeny was there, he would be precisely where Admiral Hope would like to have him. And this is what those blockheads call "making a base against England!"—going seven hundred miles inland from the Atlantic power! Poor foolish Killian at least had a wild idea what to do, though he came to grief instead of Campo Bello. But I greatly doubt if any of the other set ever had an idea, wild or tame. I see you have got a new Irish lion in Mr Stephens. I remember seeing him one in Kilkenny in 1847 or '48—a very young man as indeed I was myself. He was the son, I think, of an auctioneer's clerk in that song-celebrated city, and was even looked upon as a more than usually promising youngster by Dr. Robert Cane and other local celebrities. I am heartily glad he has come out, for if his mind be of the practical cast attributed to it—if he is really earnest and honest—the New York factions will cure him of Fenians within six months.—New York Times.

IRELAND.

How the cattle plague got into the locality (in the county Antrim) is not known, nor is there even a conjecture. There have been no drovers in the neighborhood, and no stocks has been brought into or sold out of the locality for the last eight months. It was reported that two of the farmers who had suffered from the disease were at Saintfield fair some time ago, where they had been in communication with English or Scotch drovers, but they positively deny this to be the fact. The cows which have died were all located within a distance of forty perches of each other. Some of them died in forty-eight hours from the first attack.

The police under Mr. M. B. Celly, county Inspector, were stationed around the district to prevent cows either being taken into or taken out of the locality which was declared by Professor Ferguson to be infected—about a mile in diameter—including part of the lands of Drennan, part of the lands of Creevy and part of the lands of Cargecrry. The cordon was described by Mr. Henry Fraser, Assistant Surveyor. Eighty policebearing yellow flags, to mark off the boundary.—Whig.

The exodus from our country still continues unabated, writes the Clare Journal. It is really distressing to see the number of young men and women—the very life-blood of the country—that daily depart from our station never to return. They, with their friends, sometimes so throng the station that it is impossible for ordinary passengers to obtain standing room on or about the platform. At the Limerick station, hundreds of boxes belonging to emigrants might often be seen piled up preparatory to the departure of the trains for Cork. America is not the only place of destination, as a number of young men left yesterday for Buenos Ayres, under the direction of Mr. Parsons, Emigrant Agent, and he has also the charge of sending a large number to Australia during the present week.

GOLD DIGGINGS.—From the British Columbian of the 11th of April, we learn that rich diggings have been discovered on the Big Bend on Carne's Creek. The fortunate party, who made the discovery, has sold several claims, and hundreds of men are directing their steps thitherward. At Lelouet also, the precious metal is being found in paying quantities; 12 Chinamen picked 41 ounces in a week. The prospects look bright.—But we would infer from editorials and court reports that the courts are not learned in English equity and fair play. There appears room for improvement.

WORTHY OF BEING COPIED.—The Cobourg Sun says:—"That it affords unequalled pleasure to record the fact that Mayor Beatty, of that Town, declined to preside at the banque. on the Queen's birthday, given to American and other guests, upon the ground that he could not conscientiously do so as a temperance man;" and truly adds, "very few Mayors in Canada would do so much for this good cause." May we not add very few in any country. All honor to him for his devotion to right.

The Steamer Ogemah.

The attention of travelers is invited to the advertisement in another column concerning this favorite boat. We have only to mention the name of the Ogemah, the courteous and obliging captain of which is well known, to ensure attention. She makes regular daily trips from and after the 12th instant.

Massachusetts, it is said, will furnish 15,000 men for the Fenian army. General Pitz Hugh Lee, it is said, will command the Cavalry. This regiment went in the direction of St. Albans lately.

A European Conference Finally Arranged.

WAR STILL HIGHLY PROBABLE.

A European Conference has been finally arranged. Representatives of France, England, and Russia on one side and Austria, Prussia, and Italy on the other, will assemble at the Foreign Ministry in Paris, under the presidency of M. Drouyn de L'Huys, for formally opening the conference, to solve positively the pending question between Austria, Prussia and Italy.

According to some authorities, Austria evinced a disinclination to join the Conference. It was asserted that should she persist, she would be represented pro tem. by England and Russia. There is, however, no indication of relaxation in military preparations by the several powers, and the almost universal feeling was that a pacific solution was hopeless.

TREATIES OF 1815.

[From the Pall Mall Gazette, May 14.]

As the treaty of Vienna may once more be made the starting house of transportist ambition, it may be interesting to the general reader, who is more learned in present public than in the past history to be reminded what that famous treaty really was in the first place it was seized by a larger number of States than had ever before united in a settlement of European affairs, including France, Austria, England, Russia, Prussia, Spain, Portugal and Sweden. Coming also immediately after the raid-opened shattering of old landmarks, consequent upon French conquests, the re-arrangement of territories accepted as not to a reconstruction was based almost exclusively on dynastic considerations, the real welfare of nations, and tendencies of what are now called "nationalities" being scarcely thought of.—Everywhere were nations, placed under foreign sovereignties.

England's gain, indeed, was fully equalled by her loss in the new plan. She kept Malta, which was essential to her position in the Mediterranean and where her rule was not unwelcome; for the sake of Europe generally undertook the protectorate of Ionian Islands, now got rid of; and to satisfy royal prejudices, she also preserved the kingdom of Hanover, now also got rid of.

In Italy, Milan and Venice were given to Austria and Sardinia was confirmed to Piedmont; while the Piacentin were resognised as as sham independent sovereignties, governed by collateral branches of the Austrian Hapsburgh, Austria still further obtained possession of the Tyrol, Illyria and Dalmatia.

Prussia's gains were enormous, and, unlike many of the Austrians, were acquisitions of real power. With half of Saxony, nearly Westphalia, Swedish Pomerani, and almost all the Lower Rhine Provinces, she started afresh, as a rival of Austria, far more formidable than before.

In the north of Europe, Russia received Finland from Sweden; as a compensation for which Sweden received Norway, which was taken from Denmark; and Denmark, which was not represented at the Congress, got nothing in return.

As to Poland, the three great partitioners made some ratification of boundaries.

The innumerable small German States which had existed before the French revolution, and which had been what diplomatists called mediatized, or, as plain people call it, swamped, at the setting up of the Bonapartist Confederation of the Rhine—these all remained swallowed up by their powerful neighbors.

Holland having ceded her German possessions, was consoled with the belgian provinces and became a kingdom; and Switzerland remains much as before.

In the same year, 1815, political pharisaism accomplished its masterpiece, the "Holy Alliance" between Austria Russia and Prussia, by which they bound themselves to act for the future on Christian principles only, and immediately proceeded to enforce the absolute supremacy of kings as the one great principle of Christianity. All Europe acquiesced in the announcement, with three notable exceptions—the Sultan, whose opinion was not asked, and England and the Pope who both declined to have anything to do with the imposture.

MIKE MURPHY IN QUEBEC.—The Ottawa Times of the 4th inst. says:—"The government, actuated no doubt by a desire to remove Mr. Michael Murphy from scenes of danger, and the turmoil of war have provided him with safe quarters in the capital of Quebec. The seeds which he has been so industriously sowing, will in all probability prove to have been hemp seeds. Let us hope that he may reap the harvest and that right early. If our advice might be taken we would suggest that the last scene in his eventful career be in Toronto, and witnessed by the 'Queen's Own' and others the murder of whose comrades he treacherously instigated."

CHOLERA.—Dr. Bissell's report of the 1st instant shows that 59 new cases and eight deaths from cholera have occurred on board the Peruvian and Union, since last report, leaving 97 cases on the hospital ship.—New York Ex.

The committee for the Home thankfully acknowledge the following donations for April and May:—Mrs. Millar, 1 skirt; Mrs. Jas. Edwards, 8 dozen eggs; Mrs. Nicholls, 5 dozen eggs; Mrs. J. J. Hall, basket of cakes; Mrs. Wallis, 11 bushels of potatoes; from the committee for the Volunteers lunch on the 24th May, a quantity of cold meat, and 7 loaves of bread, 4 lbs. sugar, 1 lb. tea, 4 lbs. butter, 1 bush. of Potatoes; 16 loaves of bread from B. Greene.

The Great English Remedy.

SIR JAMES CLARKE'S

CELEBRATED FEMALE PILLS,

Prepared from a Prescription of Sir James Clarke, M. D., Physician Extraordinary to the Queen.

This well-known Medicine is no imposition, but a sure and safe remedy, for Female Difficulties and Obstruction from any cause whatever; and although a powerful remedy, it contains nothing hurtful to the constitution. To married ladies it is peculiarly suited. It will in a short time bring on the monthly period with regularity.

In all cases of nervous and spinal affections, pain in the back and limbs, heaviness, fatigue on slight exertion, palpitation of the heart lowness of spirits, hysterics, sick headache, whites, and all the painful diseases occasioned by a disordered system, these Pills will effect a cure when all other means have failed.

☞ These Pills have never been known to fail, where the directions on the second page of the Pamphlet are well observed.

For full particulars, get a pamphlet, free, of the Agent.

N. B. $1 and six postage stamps enclosed to any authorised Agent will ensure a bottle, containing Pills, by return mail.

PARLEY'S

Arabian Horse Remedy and Condition Medicine

IS positively superior to any or all other preparations for the cure of Heaves, Coughs, Thick and Broken Wind, and all diseases which affect the Wind of Horses; also, as a Condition Medicine, surpassing everything of the kind; it is easy to give, sure to cure, and safe in all cases and at all times, and does not prevent the Horse from being worked while using it.

It gives the breathing apparatus, by removing from the air-vesicles remarkable thick, or that secretion which in Heaves' clogs them, causing a difficulty in breathing; and by its action on the diseased part causing the mucous membrane to resume its natural dimensions, thus equalizing the circulation of the blood, and restoring the distended vessels to their natural size; by its use the horse's appetite is improved, all derangements of the digestive organs corrected, restoring the skin, and giving to the coat a sleek and shining appearance.

BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY IN CANADA.

The following testimony from a well known and highly respected Merchant of Prescott, is corroborative of the general approval given to Dr. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY:

PRESCOTT, C. W., Dec. 8th, 1859.

Messrs. S. W. Fowle & Co., Boston.

Gentlemen:—

Being solicited by your Travelling Agent, for an expression of opinion of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, I with pleasure assert that it is, in my belief, the best remedy before the public for coughs and pulmonary complaints.

Having tested the article with myself and family, in case of severe coughs and colds, for years, with uniform and unexceptionable success, I unhesitatingly recommend it with full confidence in its merits.

Yours truly,
ALFRED HOOKER.

None genuine unless signed, I. Butts, on the wrapper. Prepared by Seth W. Fowle & Co. Boston, and for sale by all dealers in medicines.

A LIBERAL

Conservative Newspaper

A NEW VOLUME OF THE

Toronto Daily Evening Journal

[ESTABLISHED IN 1861.]

HAS REAPPEARED.

The "JOURNAL" was published for three years in Toronto as a Weekly, and for two years as a Daily Journal. Arrangements have been completed by which the Proprietor will be enabled to enlarge and otherwise improve it. It will, in future, contain the Morning and Evening Telegrams, Police Report of the same day, together with Editorials, Local, Canadian, American, and Foreign News, and Choice Literary Selections.

It is necessary that the Proprietor should have the hearty and earnest co-operation of his fellow citizens. The patronage of the enterprise, intelligence, and business of every community where newspapers are established it is the part of true wisdom for a city to encourage all such enterprises as are calculated to sustain, advance or promote its welfare, its commerce, its intelligence, or its honour. Let no man think that by letting the public take care of itself he is not neglecting his own interests and his highest duty. The sacrifice on the part of friends and the public at large will not be great in order to triumphantly sustain the Evening Journal.

TO BUSINESS MEN.

The systematic way in which the paper has been circulated, together with the great advantages afforded to the business community by means of the "SPECIAL EDITIONS" that have frequently been issued, have obtained for the Evening Journal the reputation of being an excellent advertising medium; consequently, business men in this city and elsewhere have employed the greater part of the space for their announcements. Indeed, of en the advertising space has been so well filled that it has been impossible to accommodate very many Toronto business men, who have, from time to time, kindly expressed a willingness to advertise in the Journal.

No expense has been spared or time lost in providing ways and means to place the paper in the position that the proprietor has been anxious to have it occupy

NEW TYPES, &c.,

Have been purchased to improve the typographical appearance of the Evening Journal. The length and width of the columns will be changed. Advertisements will now be condensed as much as possible so as to accommodate all City Advertisers, and the Public generally.

☞ Regular advertisers participate in the advantages of all the Special Editions of the paper, without any extra charge.

A plan has been adopted for having the paper circulated in all parts of the city, so that Advertisers may rest assured that their interests will be promoted.

ADVERTISING RATES.

A new feature has been introduced in connection with this paper, viz.: A Cheaper System of Advertising than has ever been offered to the Public.—Advertisements will be inserted for Seven Cents per line the first insertion, and two Cents per line for each subsequent insertion. And if an advertiser can put all he has to say in two lines, the charge will be only Fourteen Cents, and Four Cents for every additional insertion. Short Notices of Births, Deaths, Marriages, Houses to Let, Properties for Sale, Meetings &c., of five lines or less, will be inserted for Fifteen Cents the first insertion, and Seven Cents for each subsequent insertion. All advertisements (with the exception enumerated) to be inserted for a short time, will be charged at the rate of Seven Cents per line first insertion, and Two Cents per line for every additional insertion. The privilege of Annual Advertisers is limited to their own business.

☞ Yearly Advertisements charged according to the space required. Business and Professional Cards (without change) will be inserted at Two Dollars per line by the year, when they contain six lines or less. Advertisements not accompanied by written directions will be inserted until forbid, and charged accordingly. Accounts with yearly advertisers will be settled monthly, unless otherwise arranged.

TERMS.

The "Evening Journal" will be reduced to One Cent per copy, Six Cents a week; or, Four Dollars per annum Mailed, or delivered by Carriers in any part of the City.

☞ A Local Story, entitled "A Re-consecrated Husband," will be commenced in the First Number of the New Volume of the "Toronto Daily Evening Journal," and will be continued until finished.

A. H ST. GERMAIN,
Editor and Proprietor.

Toronto, May 25th 1866.

THE DAILY REVIEW.

A NEW FIRST-CLASS INDEPENDENT Daily, bearing the above title, will be commenced in Montreal on Friday, the 1st of June.

It is proposed that this paper shall be equal to any now existing in Montreal for the fulness and accuracy of its information and reports on matters of general or commercial interest, while its editorial articles will be marked by a spirit of justice and liberality in the treatment of all subjects as they arise.

In Politics The Daily Review will aim at independence, supporting such measures as appear to be necessary or conducive to the welfare of the country, without regard to the sources whence they emanate; taking as a guiding principle that support should be extended to every proper sentiment expressed or action performed. At the same time the publishers feel that too high an estimate of the privileges now enjoyed in connection with the Mother Country cannot be taken, and pledge their influence towards strengthening that connection, and opposing everything that tends to our absorption by a neighbouring nation.

Subscriptions—Five Dollars per annum, delivered in the city, or Four Dollars per mail (payable in advance).

From the manifest interest already taken in connection with this enterprise, the Publishers and Proprietors of The Daily Review are assured that their paper will enjoy a large circulation amongst the most influential, public-spirited and wealthy of our citizens; and can confidently assert that advantages second to none now offered by existing city journals, will be presented to Advertisers.

The rates of advertising will be such as are common to daily papers. Those advertisements given at the commencement allowed special advantages.

See what the most popular and widely circulated periodicals say of our Establishment:

From the "Dispatch" of February 25, 1866.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the announcement of Messrs. Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, Silver Ware, and Fancy Goods, in our advertising columns. We are personally acquainted with the members of this firm and know them to be gentlemen of sterling worth and integrity. Their stock of goods, for variety and extent, we have scarcely seen paralleled.

From the "Mirror of Fashion," March 1, 1865.

Messrs. Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, etc., opened on the 15th ult., and we venture to say that no finer display of goods was ever exhibited by any establishment in this city. The ladies thronged their bazaar almost to suffocation, although the streets were rendered nearly impassable by the melted snow and slush. We predict for them a wonderful success.

From the "Ledger," February 28, 1865.

Our lady friends should visit the extensive establishment of Messrs. Devaugh & Co., No. 15 Maiden Lane, if they wish to indulge themselves with a sight which they will long remember. Such a profusion of elegant Watches, Chains, Rings, Earrings, and, in short, of Jewelry of every name, kind and description, we never before witnessed. Their silver and plated ware is superb and almost casts into the shade the other splendid establishments which have long been the boast of our city. It is estimated that their stock is worth not less than one million of dollars.

How You Can Get a Prize.

Send Twenty-Five Cents to us, and as soon as we receive it we will mail you a Certificate showing what you are entitled to. If the article or articles please you, send back the Certificate and One Dollar and we will forward you the article, no matter how costly it may be. If the article is not what you wish, state, when you send the Certificate and dollar, what other article of the same value you prefer and we will send it. If you wish more than one Certificate send us $1 and we will send five; for $2, eleven; for $5, thirty; for $10, sixty; for $15, one hundred.

Agents are wanted in the Army and in every place. We have an immense stock of goods to dispose of, and need a large number of Agents Our terms to Agents are very liberal and some even of our Lady Agents are making from $5 to $20 a day. We give Agents 50 per cent. on all Certificates they sell provided they remit not less than $1 for eight.

GREAT IMPROVEMENT IN

SEWING MACHINES.

EMPIRE SHUTTLE MACHINE!

PATENTED FEB. 14th, 1860.

Salesrooms, { 536 Broadway, New York, / 252 Washington St., Boston.

THIS MACHINE is constructed on entirely new principles of mechanism, possessing many rare and valuable improvements, having been examined by the most profound experts, and pronounced to be

Simplicity and Perfection Combined.

It has a straight needle, perpendicular action, makes the lock or shuttle stitch which will neither rip nor ravel, and is alike on both sides; performs perfect sewing on every description of material, from leather to the finest Nainsook Muslin, with cotton, linen or silk thread, from the coarsest to the finest number. Having neither CAM nor COGWHEEL, and the least possible friction, it runs as smooth as glass and is

Emphatically a Noiseless Machine.

It requires FIFTY PER CENT less power to drive it than any other Machine in the market. A girl twelve years of age can work it steadily, without fatigue or injury to health.

Its strength and Wonderful Simplicity of construction renders it aim at impossible to get out of order, and is GUARANTEED by the Company to give entire satisfaction.

We respectfully invite all those who may desire to supply themselves with a superior article, to come and examine the Unrivalled Machine.

But in a more especial manner do we elicit the patronage of

Merchant Tailors,	Corset Makers,
Coach Makers,	Gaiter Fitters,
Hoop Skirt Manufacturers,	Shoe Binders,
Shirt and Bosom Makers.	Vest and Pantaloon Makers.
	Dress Makers.

Religious and Charitable Institutions will be liberally dealt with.

One half-hour's instruction is sufficient to enable any person to work the Machine to their entire satisfaction.

Agents wanted for all Towns in the United States, where agents are not already established. Also for Cuba, Mexico, Central and South America, to whom a liberal discount will be given.

Terms invariably Cash on delivery.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any Cologne, used to bathe the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headache, &c. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and has obtained a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by Demas Barnes & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

Over a Million Dollars Saved!

Gentleman:—"I had a negro man worth $1,200 who took cold from a bad hurt in the leg, and was useless for over a year. I had used everything I could hear of without benefit, until I tried the Mexican Mustang Liniment.—It soon effected a permanent cure."

J. L. DOWNING.

Montgomery, Ala., June 17, 1865.

"I take pleasure in recommending the Mexican Mustang Liniment as a valuable and indispensible article for Sprains, Sores, Scratches or Galls on Horses. Our men all say it acts like magic."

J. W. HEWITT,
Foreman for Amerlea, Wells, Fargo's and Harnden's Express.

"The Sprain of my daughters ankle, occasioned while skating last winter, was entirely cured in one week, after she commenced using your celebrated Mustang Liniment.

ED. REILLY.

Gloucester, Mass., Aug. 4, 1865.

It is an admitted fact that the Mexican Mustang Liniment performs more cures in shorter time, on man and beast, than any article ever discovered. Families, livery-men and planters should always have it on hand. Quick and sure it certainly is. All genuine is wrapped in steel-plate engravings, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook Chemist, and the private U. S. stamp of Demas Barnes & Co over the top.

An effort has been made to counterfeit it with a cheap stone plate label. Look closely!

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER—for Indigestion, Nausea, Heart-burn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, Flatulency, &c., where a warming stimulant is required. Its careful preparation and entire purity makes it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cts. per bottle. Ask for "Lyon's" Pure Extract. Take no other.

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

Who would not be beautiful? Who would not add to their beauty? What gives that marble purity and distingue appearance we observe upon the stage, and in the city belle? It is no longer a secret. They use Hagan's Magnolia Balm. Its continued use removes tan, freckles, pimples and roughness, from the face and hands, and leaves the complexion smooth, transparent, blooming and ravishing. Unlike many cosmetics, it contains no material injurious to the skin. Any Druggists will order it for you, if not on hand, at 50 cts per bottle.

Helmstreet's inimitable Hair Coloring is not a dye. All instantaneous dyes are composed of lunar caustic, and more or less destroy the vitality and beauty of the hair. This is the original Hair Coloring, and has been growing in favor over twenty years. It restores gray hair to its original color by gradual absorption, in a most remarkable manner. It is also a beautiful hair dressing. Sold in two sizes—50 cents and $1—by all dealers.

C. HELMSTREET, Chemist.

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

It is a most delightful Hair Dressing.
It eradicates scurf and dandruff.
It keeps the hair rich, soft and glossy.
It prevents hair turning gray and falling off.
It restores hair upon prematurely bald heads.
This is just what Lyon's Kathairon will do. It is pretty—it is cheap—durable. It is literally sold by the car-load, and yet its almost increasing, until there is hardly a country store that does not keep it, or a family that does not use it.

PIANO-FORTES.

BEMIS' NEW PATENT.

ARE THE ONLY INSTRUMENTS constructed on such a truly scientific principle, that they have greater strength, and will remain longer in tune than any other Piano. The construction is simple and natural, all the unnecessary lumber in the body of the instrument is dispensed with; the sound boards are merely two arched planks of thin wood, like the front and back of a violin; the strings are attached to a strong iron frame, which is separate and entirely independent of the case, thereby dispensing with the old heavy form of stringing by substituting straight bridges, preserving at the same time the Over Strung Bass, of which Mr Dodson is the inventor. By these improvements we gain much more vibratory power, at the same time preserving all its purity and richness of tone.

They have received the highest testimonials from the Press, and all the principal artists in the country, among which are the names of

Harry Sanderson,	L. M. Gottschalk,
Miss Bennett,	S. Thalberg,
Theodore Eisfeld,	Wm Mason,
Herman Wollenhaupt,	A Baril
Francis H. Brown,	M. Strakosch,
Wm. Henry Fry.	Chevalier Prudent

MR. SIGISMUND THALBERG, the great pianist, says:—I have examined your new Piano-fortes and I cordially approve of its system of construction. Its principle, by which great increase of vibratory power is obtained; being very simple and perfectly philosophical. The tone is grand and noble; it has great capacity for sustaining the sound or singing, and its volume of tone or power I have never heard excelled in depth, purity and sympathetic sweetness.

WM. HENRY FRY, late musical art is of the N. Y. Tribune says:—I have examined your newly invented Piano-Fortes. They merit all the praise given to them by Messrs. Thalberg Gottschalk, Strakosch, Mason and others. As regards the structure, they are original and philosophical; in purity, volume, and sustaining of tone; in vocal verisimilitude, that prolonging excellence which enables the pianist to "sing" on the instrument. Your Pianos deserve the highest rank. Your invention, in my opinion, is destined to work radical changes in the manufacture of Pianos throughout the world.

From the N. Y. Herald, Sept. 8.—Upon a careful examination of Dodson Piano-Forte, we find the results obtained are a very fine singing tone, great purity and brilliancy throughout the entire instrument, not often found in Pianos constructed upon the old plan.

The N. Y. Times, July 12, says:—We have now an instrument without an equal. It can sing with a smoothe delicacy, perfectly unattainable on any other instrument; an ordinary player obtains with no exertion, the fullness of a Grand Piano Forte and they must speedily supersede the old styles.

GENTLEMEN:—Having thoroughly examined and tested the Piano-Fortes invented and patented by Mr S. B. Dodson, I am of the opinion that the tone resulting from his improvements, as exhibited in the instruments under examination in point of richness, depth and brilliancy, equals that of the best Grand Piano-Fortes, and excells them in pure, musical and actual tone, power thus approximating closer to what I consider perfection in the instrument than has yet been achieved by any other system of manufacture.

Yours respectfully,
L. M. GOTTSCHALK.

LLOYD'S GREAT TOPOGRAPHICAL RAILWAY and COUNTY MAP of ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND and WALES—Six feet long, mounted and varnished; over $100,000 and four years time; was published July 28, and is the best map ever made since the world was first made; shows 200,000 cities, towns, villages, market places, post offices, castles, country seats, and 30,000 railways and railway stations, with the distances between each station marked plainly, and the official name and total length of each railway in actual operation up to June, 1865, is given. The railway stations are all numerically and alphabetically arranged. The lakes, rivers, hills and mountains are exhibited, with the altitude of each in feet, made from trigonometrical surveys by our own engineers, draughtsmen and Photographers sent to England expressly to make a superior map of that country; the whole engraved on steel, colored superbly in counties, in outline and varnished. Price 5 shillings sterling ($2). No map at $10 can compare to this. Canvassers throughout the world wanted. Also men, with a small capital, to go to Canada, Chicago, Cincinnati, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, East and West Indies, Australia and California, to open offices. Can make a fortune wholesaling this and other maps to sub-agents. Eighty thousand copies of this map were subscribed for in England before going to press, as can be shown by our agents letters to us. Ten new maps now under way.

FINKLE & LYON

SEWING MACHINE CO.

OFFICE 501 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

GUARANTEE.—After a fair trial, if any purchaser does not regard the Finkle & Lyon Sewing Machine as superior to any machine in market, he can return it and have his money. It has taken many of the highest prizes.—is less complicated than any other first class machine,—does a wider range of work without changing,—requires no taking apart to clean or oil, and no "humming" to set needle, regulate tension, or operate machine.

N. B. Any Clergyman sending us two orders for Machines, shall receive one for himself as a present. The same proposition is extended to Profession and Teachers.

We have now completed our New Manufactory at a cost of some $200,000, including New Patents and important improvements; and the object of the above proposition is to secure the immediate introduction of our improved machine into every town in the United States without incurring the great expense of a travelling agent.

This proposition cannot avail in towns occupied by our own agents.

Please send for descriptive Catalogue, with samples of sewing.

The Daily Telegraph,

AT the present crisis of Provincial affairs, the publishers feel that there is room in the City of Toronto for an independent evening journal, which, without party spirit, shall discuss dispassionately the important issues now occupying so large a share of public attention. Journals fettered by political ties, and biassed by particular interests, are not free to present to their readers these issues in the broad and comprehensive manner which is now more than ever desirable. In addition to this, events now crowd so thickly upon us that the public naturally desire more frequent supplies of information than the morning papers can give. To meet these desiderata the publication of THE DAILY TELEGRAPH is designed. Although attached to no political party,

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH

will give no uncertain sound upon public affairs. Amongst other things, it will advocate:—

1. British Connection, strenuously opposing the formation of any political union with the neighbouring Republic.

2. Confederation of the British North American Provinces so soon as the full consent of the Maritime Provinces is obtained. This measure is imperatively required by the hostile commercial and political attitude of the United States government. It is, moreover, desirable as forming the germ of nationality which may be further developed in the future.

3. Free Trade, as far as is compatible with the necessities of the revenue; also, a renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty with our neighbors as soon as they are prepared to treat with us upon just and equitable terms.

4. The encouragement of Emigration and a more liberal management of the public lands, so as to promote the opening up of our waste territory, and its occupation by bona fide settlers.

5. The Extension of Trade Relations with other British colonies and with foreign nations.

6. In British affairs moderate and judicious reform, but not violent organic change in a Democratic direction.

Other public questions, as they arise, will be dealt with in the same moderate and liberal spirit.

During the approaching session of Parliament its proceedings will be duly reported, and at all times the latest intelligence received up to the time of going to press will be published.

The Markets and matters of interest to commercial men will receive special attention in THE DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Of all local matters of public importance, courts of law, school boards, public meetings, &c., &c., full and accurate reports will be given. To the proceedings of the City Council special attention will be given, and in corporation matters THE DAILY TELEGRAPH will, contrary to the present practice, give an unswerving support to those who faithfully serve the interests of the city, irrespective of party and political leanings.

At the same time it will unsparingly expose all abuses and denounce all corruption, no matter who the guilty parties may be.

The first number will be issued on the 21st May, neatly printed on good white paper, delivered to subscribers at the rate of $5 per year, payable in advance, or ten cents per week.—Subscriptions by post, $4.50 per annum, invariably in advance.

CHAPTER VI.

Starting from the sofa, upon which he had passed the night, at the sound of what seemed the closing of a door, Harvey Lee found himself standing on the center of one of his parlors, with the dim gray light of the morning stealing in at one of the windows, from which the curtain had been drawn aside. For a moment or two, he was so bewildered as to be unable to explain, satisfactorily to himself, the reason of his being there at such a time. Then came slowly and sadly upon his mind, a recollection of the event that had occurred on the preceding evening, with his own hasty words, and his wife's still more imprudent and hasty response.

With these recollections came a feeling of condemnation and regret; and a consciousness, that he was as much to blame as Fanny, and, perhaps even more. That, instead of becoming irritated at her false views, too frequently annoying apparent in action, he should have tried to correct the one, while he bore patiently with the other.

Under the influence of these feelings, he went up stairs, resolving, as he did so, to make at least some slight confession of wrong on his part, and to seek for a reconciliation that should be permanent.

But, on entering his wife's chamber, was startled to find no one there. His eyes turned instantly to the bed—it had not been slept in during the night! For nearly a minute, he stood with his hand upon his forehead, utterly unable to collect his scattered senses. Then he turned to see if she had left anything by which he might gain a clue to the mistery of her absence. Pen, ink and paper were upon a table, with a letter folded, sealed, and directed to him. Breaking it open, he read with an aching heart the following letter:

"DEAR HARVEY,—I say 'dear,' for in spite of all your arbitrary an over bearing conduct toward me, I feel that I love you still, and must ever love you, though my heart break in the effort to efface from it your image. As I said last night, so I say now, in a moment of coolness and deliberation I will not live with you, if I am to use your own words, 'to know my place and keep it.' Rather will I die in the effort to maintain my freedom and my rights.—You are the strongest, and have society's general and passive consent on your side—to remain with you, then, would only be to make us both more miserable than we can possible be apart—for our lives would be a scene of bootless contention. I go, then, from under your roof. But where shall I go? Among my former friends? No! For they like the world, will be all on your side. The wife will be driven back to her condition of slavery. Shall I rid myself of a miserable life? No! I dare not do that. My life is not my own to take. But even if I could become so far insane as to do violence to myself, the thoughts of an unborn babe would stay my hand. Where then shall I go? Heaven only knows, and Heaven will direct me. As for you seek not to discover the place where I shall hide myself. If successful, your labor will be in vain, for I can never return to my condition of humble dependence on a man who cannot love me as an equal.

'Farewell! FANNY.'

After Lee had read this letter, marked in many places with tears that evinced the powerful struggle it had cost his wife, he sunk into a chair, his mind for some time paralyzed under a painful sense of the almost insurmountable difficulties that where presented. Suddenly he remembered that he had seemed to be awakened from sleep by the sound of a closing door.

"She has but just gone, then," he exclaimed, starting up and descending the stairs at almost a single bound. The front door was unlocked. Passing instantly into the street, he took the most direct way to her aunt's, under the feeble hope that her regard for that aged relative would prompt her to go there for a few minutes, under cover of some feigned excuse.

He found the old lady up, and ready to express surprise at so early a visit. But he excused himself by alleging that he was taking a morning walk, and could not pass without dropping in to say, "How do you do?"

He lingered only a moment or two, and then returned to the street. An empty carrage was just passing; this suggested an idea, and he hailed the driver, and made an arrangement to be driven out, with all possible speed, some two miles upon each of the main roads leading from the city.—The first direction was over Market street bridge. As the carriage gained the top of a hill about two miles beyond the bridge, Lee noticed a female far ahead, moving hurriedly along, and occasionally glancing back, as if fearful that she might be followed. The dress, air, gait and whole appearance made him positive that it was his wife.

'Dash ahead, driver! Quick!' he urged, eagerly stretching himself out of the window, and straining his eyes to detect more and stronger evidence to satisfy his mind that the woman he saw in advance was Fanny.

A small valley intervening between them, as they descended into it, she was necessarily hid from their view. On gaining the next elevation, so living being was to be seen on the long stretch of turnpike before them.

'Quick driver! Quick! She has left the road, and may elude us in the woods.'

'Who has left the road?' asked the driver, altogether ignorant of the true state of the journey.

'Why, the woman you saw ahead just now. It is she that I am in search of.—Quick! Quick! I will give you a hundred dollars if you prevent her escape.'

Thus urged, the driver applied the lash to his horses, and the carriage bounded forward with fearful velocity, threatening both life and limb of the excited passenger.—But he thought not of personal danger. A few minutes sufficed to bring them to the spot where the female had been last seen.

As the carriage stopped, Lee sprang upon the ground, and looked eagerly and searchingly in all directions. But no living form was in sight.

'She has gone into the woods, of course' the driver remarked, mechanically. 'So do you take one side of the road, and I will take the other, and we shall easily find her.'

Waiting to discuss the matter no further, Lee sprang over the fence upon one side, and the driver upon the other, and then each commenced a careful search. For nearly half an hour the distressed husband wandered about, gaining first one acclivity and then another, to be disappointed in the prospect newly opened to his eye, with no living creature to animate it. He was returning after a vain search, to the place from from which he started, and had reached the top of a hill overlooking the road, when a loud call from the driver arrested his attention. Hurrying along in the direction from which the sound came, he was soon taught of his companion, who held a struggling woman in his arms, whom he was bearing toward the carriage. A few rapid bounds brought him to the spot, but alas! the face of the woman was that of a stranger.

'Let her go, driver!' he said, in a low, disappointed tone. 'She is not the one I am seeking.'

As the driver released his hold, the frightened young creature, for she was young, and had a pale distressed countenance, sprung quickly away from them, and ran at full speed, until out of sight.

Sick at heart, Harvey Lee re-entered the carriage, and giving directions for the driver to return to the city, and then take the Ridge Road, resigned himself to a state of gloomy self-upbraidings.

It is needless for the reader to accompany him in his vain search for Fanny throughout the whole of that wretched day. After going as far as Laurel Hill, on the Ridge Road, and returning, he dismissed the carriage, and proceeded on foot to Germantown, inquiring at every house on the way, if a person, answering to Fanny's description, had been seen passing along since the morning. Not the slightest clue being yet gained, he returned by the way of Wissahicon and Ridge Road, making careful inquiries throughout the whole distance, but with the same result, or, with only discordant and altogether unsatisfactory information, that left his mind nothing to rest upon. Thus he continued, not once tasting food, to make inquiries throughout the whole day along the principle routes leading from Philadelphia, but all in vain. As night came on, he turned his stept homeward, both body and mind in a high state of fever.

CHAPTER VII.

The only one who saw, in the manner of Mr. and Mrs. Lee on the evening before, anything but a playful difference, was Mrs. Woodman, and she was painfully conscious that something was wrong. Several times within the few months that had passed since their marriage, had she found Fanny evidently much disturbed in mind; but all inquiries into the cause had been met by a steady evasion, or an effort to treat the whole thing lightly. The cause she judged to be a misunderstanding between them in regard to the true relation which they bore to each other. Fanny she knew to be a little self-willed, and had frequently observed and disapproved of some of her actions toward Harvey before marriage.—But she had hoped that it would all come right in due time. That her love for her husband would instinctively prompt her to think of him, and defer to him, much more than she had at first appeared to do. But the evident ill-feeling, suppressed, it is true so much as not to appear except to her more discriminating eyes manifested by both of them on the preceding evening, and the provoking pertinacity with which Fanny continued to make remarks that her husband disapproved, alarmed her for their happiness. She determined that, on the next day, she would call in and have a plain talk with Fanny, and endeavour, if possible, to make her sensible of her error.

According about ten o'clock she called at the residence of Mr. Lee, and entered, without making any inquiries, as she had been used to doing, as soon as the servant had answered the bell.

'Is Mrs. Lee in her own room?' she asked of the servant, who followed her into the parlour.

'No, ma'am, she is not," was the reply of the domestic, whose manner was strange and evidently somewhat concerned.

'Is she at home?'

'No, ma'am.'

'How long since she went out?'

'Indeed I do not know, Mrs. Woodman. When I got up this morning, the front door was open, and both she and Mr. Lee gone away. I got the breakfast ready, and waited a long time, but they did not come back. I don't know what to make of it, and am afraid something has has happened. They couldn't have gone to bed at all, for neither the bed nor anything else in their chamber is out of order.'

'Strange! Very strange!' was the reply that Mrs. Woodman made.

'Did they intend going anywhere,' the servant asked. 'She most tells you every thing.'

'Not to my knowledge, Rachel.'

'What shall I do, Mrs. Woodman? I am very much troubled. If any thing has happened to them, I shall feel bad about not having let it be known as soon as I missed them.'

'Leave that to me, Rachel; and do you remain here. I will come in again in the course of an hour or two—perhaps, by that time, one or both of them may have returned.'

Unwilling to attract attention toward the young couple, that might prove exceedingly annoying to them, and perhaps, prejudice their standing in some circles, Mrs. Woodman contented herself by visiting all the places where it was at all likely that either of them might be found, and where, if, they had been, she would hear it as a matter of course. But her search was fruitless; and she returned after a lapse of two hours, to the residence of Mr. Lee, to meet with no more encouraging result.

In a state of painful anxiety and irresolution, she remained until toward evening, when she again repaired to the house of her young friends. Neither of them had yet returned. Undecided how to act, she had lingered there for nearly an hour, when the front door was suddenly thrown open by a strong hand, and in a moment after Harvey Lee stood before her, his clothes covered with dust, his face flushed, and his eyes wild and restless.

'Is she here, Mrs. Woodman?' he asked in a hoarse, eager whisper, grasping her hand, and looking her earnestly in the face.

'No Harvey, she is not,' Mrs. Woodman replied, sadly.

'Then in heaven's name, where is she?' was his agonizing response. 'Tell me that, or I shall go mad!'

'Be calm, my young friend,' Mrs. Woodman said in a soothing voice, 'and tell me the meaning of all this. Where have you been all day? Why is Fanny absent?—Tell me all, Harvey.'

'That will give you the whole secret,' he replied, hurriedly, drawing Fanny's letter from his pocket and handing it to Mrs. Woodman. 'Wretch! miserable wretch that I am!"

'Do not blame yourself alone for this,' Mrs. Woodman urged as soon as she had read Fanny's letter, seeing that Lee was striding backward and forward through the parlours, and muttering to himself in a wild incoherent manner. 'You have both been in error, and this, I trust, will be a lesson whose salutary effects will never be erased from your minds.'

'Don't speak of the future, Mrs. Woodman! Tell me where I can find her!'

'Like yourself, Harvey, I am ignorant of the place to which she has gone. But do not give yourself unnecessary trouble on the subject. She is, of course, safe, and will soon be restored to you.'

'Safe—safe—Do you really think she is safe?' he said, in a wild and wandering manner. 'O, if I could only feel that she was safe! Wretch! wretch that I am!'

And he again commenced pacing the rooms hurriedly to and fro.

'Come and sit down on the sofa, with me, Harvey,' Mrs. Woodman now said, in a voice of forced calmness, going up to him, and laying her hand upon his arm.—She was alarmed for the predominance of his reason.

Yielding to the gentle force with which she urged her request, Lee, paused, and then permitted himself to be led to the sofa.

'Harvey, my young friend, do you know that you are acting in a very wild and irrational manner?' Mrs. Woodman said, slowly, and with marked emphasis.

'Is it any wonder if I am?' he replied, but in a calmer voice.

'Enough has occurred to agitate violently the mind of any one, I know, Harvey. But the part of wisdom is to act under all trying circumstances with calmness and prudence—for only in this way can we extricate ourselves from them.'

'I will try to be calm, Mrs. Woodman.'

'Make the effort, and you will be successful. And now tell me at what time you think Fanny left the house.'

'Just after daylight, I think. After the company left last evening, harsh words passed between us, when, in reply to some cutting remark of hers, about my wish to domineer over her, I told her that she must not talk to me in that style. This produced a warmer expression of feeling from her and a more decided reply from me, in which I said something about the necessity of her keeping in her true place, if she wished to live with me. An instant declaration on her part followed this, that I did not dream of her putting into execution—a declaration that she would not live with me. She then went up into her chamber, and I threw myself upon the sofa, where I passed the night. I was dreaming about something, I do not know what, when the sound of a door closing seemed to awaken me. Starting up, I perceived the daylight streaming through the window, the curtain of which had been drawn aside, probably by her hand, for the purpose of getting a last look at my face, as I lay asleep on the sofa. The sound that awakened me must have been made by her as she left the house.'

'Did you at once discover that she was missing?'

'Yes; for I went immediately up stairs where I found the letter you have just read.'

'Then what course did you pursue?'

'I went first to her aunt's, but she had not been there. Then I hired a carriage and rode out for two or three miles upon several of the principal roads leading from the city, in hope of overtaking her, for it was instantly impressed upon my mind that she would leave the city. Failing in this, I have ever since been walking out and in the main avenues to the country, inquiring at every house, in hope that some one had seen her pass, and that I might thus get a clue to the mystery of her departure.'

'And all to no purpose?'

'Yes. All has been labor spent in vain. Where can she be? What can have become of her? She must be found, and this very night, or the suspense will drive me mad.' As Lee said this, he made an effort to rise quickly from the sofa, but Mrs. Woodman gently detained him.

'Let me again urge you to be calm, my dear young friend,' she said, 'you are now suffering from over excitement of both mind and body, and need rest. It will be in vain for you to attempt to discover Fanny's retreat to-night. She is safely sheltered somewhere, perhaps, within a very short distance of her real home, and may even now be repenting bitterly the step she has taken. Rest then, for to-night, and to-morrow's dawn may see the truant's return. If not, both your mind and body will be re-invigorated, and you thus be enabled to take cooler and more certain measures for finding her.'

'There is reason in what you say,' Lee replied, after a brief silence. 'But I cannot feel that I would be acting right to abandon the search for a moment. And as for sleep, that is out of the question. I cannot sleep.'

'Unless you get a few hours' sleep, you will be sick—so sick as to be unable to do anything toward finding your wife. Even now you are incapable, were it morning, to take a single right step in the matter.'

'I believe what you say to be true,' Lee said, mournfully. 'And, therefore, I will be guided by your cooler judgment. I will try to rest for the night, if that is possible. But it is still early. Something may yet be done.'

'Nothing more than what has already been done, Harvey. The first thing, now, is for you to recruit for calmer efforts than you have yet been able to make, if the return of to morrow should leave any thing to do. Promise me, then, that you will not leave the house to-night.'

'How can I make such a promise, Mrs. Woodman, when it is only by an effort that I can constrain myself to remain here for an instant?'

'Are not my reasons for your doing so, good?'

'I believe they are.'

'Then compel yourself to act in the way that your own judgment tells you to be right.'

'I will try.'

'Promise me that you will not go out, unless some news should come of Fanny, until I see you in the morning.'

'How early may I expect you?'

'By an hour after daylight.'

'I promise, for you are right, I am sure.'

Mrs. Woodman then saw the domestic, and gave her directions to get some supper for Mr. Lee, with whom she remained until after it was on the table, and then insisted on his taking some food and a cup of tea, before returning for the night. Yielding to her kind importunities, he ate a few mouthfuls, and then went up to his chamber, with the promise that he would go at once to bed. This promise, however, he did not keep. It seemed impossible for him to do so, for all around him were speaking memorials of the absent one—absent under such my terious and painful circumstances—absent too in the aroused effort to escape his tyranny. How could he suffer his head to rest upon the pillow from which his conduct had banished her? He could not endure the thought, but turned, sickening, away, and seated himself in the chair and by the table where she had evidently passed he previous night, and where she had penned the letter that had declared her intention of leaving him forever.

Leaning his head down upon the table, he groaned aloud in bitterness of spirit. For nearly an hour he remained motionless in this position, his thoughts busy with trouble images that grew more and more vague and fantastic every moment. At the end of that period, all consciousness of external things had passed from his mind. He was buried in a deep sleep.

Waiting long enough to feel assured that he had retired to bed in accordance with his promise, Mrs. Woodman charged the domestic to be up by day-dawn and prepare breakfast, as Mr. Lee would be going out early, and could not wait for the morning meal should it not be ready in time. She then left the house, and retired to her own dwelling.

CHAPTER VIII.

Once sound asleep, nature claimed her just respite from care and weariness, and even though the posture which Harvey Lee had chosen was an uncomfortable one, he did not awake until the sun shone brightly in at the windows. Starting, then, from a troubled dream, he became once more conscious of the painful realities by which he was surrounded. But his mind was far calmer than on the evening before, and he could think much more clearly and rationally than he was then able to do.

He did not attempt to leave the house until the arrival of Mrs. Woodman, for whom he looked with much anxiety. He wanted counsel, and knew of no one whose advice, under all the circumstance, he could so well confide in as hers.

He did not wait long, for even earlier than she had promised, did that lady call at the house of her young friend, so anxious was she about both him and Fanny, and so much in hope that the latter had repented of her hasty step and returned. She found Harvey in the parlor, walking slowly backward and forward.

'Any news of Fanny yet?' she asked in a voice that trembled between hope and fear.

'None at all,' he replied, shaking his head mournfully.

'Strange infatuation! What could have prompted so wild and foolish an act?'—Mrs. Woodman said, in a disappointed tone, as she sunk upon a chair. She had evidently been encouraging the hope that Fanny would come home during the night, or at least at a very early hour in the morning.

'And now, what is to be done?' was Lee's question, after the pause of a few moments. 'Prompt and energetic measures, it seems to me, ought at once to be restored to, in order to discover her place of concealment. I have thought of advertising in all the papers. But I shrink from such an exposure.'

'No—no! Don't do that, yet. Think of her as safe somewhere. And in searching her out, provide for the future as much as possible. The publicity which would thus be given to this indiscreet act, and the free comment that would be made upon it by editors, who think more of the attractiveness of a piece of gossip than of the wounds they are inflicting, would make the whole affair still more painful and mortifying to you both than it now is. Let a few active, discreet friends be first taken into our counsel. Then I would advise the employment of the police, under the pledge of secrecy, to make as thorough an examination as possible of the city, and, at the same time, of every village and farm-house within five miles of Philadelphia, and even beyond that if necessary. It will require time to fully complete such an investigation, but its results must be certain.'

The plan was fully approved by Lee, who took immediate steps to put it into execution. The true cause of Fanny's absence, however, he did not state. That was left to conjecture, and alluded to by him as a painful mystery. No one suspected it to be the result of a little misunderstanding, or that the wife had, avowedly, fled from the tyranny of an overbearing husband. The true idea entertained in reference to the whole affair, was well stated in the following notice which appeared, much to the mortific tion and regret of Lee, in a solitary newspaper on the next morning. Rumor quickly found its way to an editor's study.

'PAINFUL MYSTERY.—We have just learned, with sincere regret, that Mrs. ——, the handsome, intelligent, and accomplished wife of Mr. ——, a young merchant of this city, much esteemed in certain circles for his gentlemanly manners, honorable principles and high intelligence, has left her home under very mysterious circumstances, evidently suffering under an attack of temporary mental alienation. What renders the case a peculiarly interesting one, is the fact that it is less than a year since her marriage. No cause, other than that assigned, can possibly be conjectured, as she was known to be tenderly attached to her husband. Up to this time, now some forty-eight hours, not the slightest trace of her has been discovered. Most deeply do we sympathise with her afflicted friends, and earnestly hope that their anxious suspense may be speedily terminated.'

This paragraph, repeated through all the newspapers on the next morning, made the affair common property, and its discussion among those who had known Mrs. Lee, the principal theme of conversation. To give the tone and spirit of these discussions, a single instance will suffice.

'Have you heard the news?' a young lady, or rather an elderly young lady, of rather a censorious turn, who had accompanied the party to the Museum, asked, joining a circle of some half dozen at the house of a friend. Her name was Miss Lake.

'About Mrs. Lee?'

'Yes.'

'O, yes. We were just talking about her. Isn't it dreadful?'

'Indeed it is. But what in the world could have induced her to act so strangely.'

'That is the very point we were discussing. Melvina Marygold told me this morning that she heard some one say, several months ago, that she and her husband disagreed dreadfully.'

'O, no! no! no!' instantly ran around the circle. 'I do not believe a word of it.'

'Nor I.'

'Nor I.'

'Nor I.'—was repeated in quick succession.

'As to the truth or falsity of the matter I am sure I don't know anything certain,' the young lady who had given the scandalous rumor, remarked, tossing her little head with a half indifferent, half incredulous air. 'But one thing is certain, the story came very straight.'

'From whom did it come?'

'From Mrs. Cordory, and you know she was very intimate with Mrs. Lee.'

'Mrs. Cordory!' ejaculated one of the company, in a contemptuous tone. 'Of course, she sees in the condition of every young couple a reflection of her own state. Everybody knows that she and her husband are always jarring.'

'And what is more,' spoke up another, 'she says that she doesn't believe any married people live together upon pretty good terms. I don't like Mrs. Cordory, and never did.'

'Nor I.'

'Nor I'—

Again ran through the circle.

'Well, as to that I have nothing to say,' resumed the young lady who had reported the rumor of a disagreement between Mr. and Mrs. Lee. 'But one thing I do know, and that is, that this affair has brought to my recollection some singular things apparent to their intercourse, that I could not help thinking a little strange at the time.'

'What are they?' eagerly asked one of voices, and all eyes were turned toward the speaker with glances of strong interest.

'One evening,' ran on this young lady, 'I dropped in with a friend to sit an hour with them. Mrs. Lee received us in her ordinary frank and cordial manner, but I soon saw, or thought that I saw, something different in her countenance and in the tone of her voice, from what was usual. I paid little attention to this, however. Still, I could not but observe, that during all the time we were there, she never once addressed her husband, nor did he at any time reply to a remark of hers, or speak to her upon any subject. I supposed, of course, that all this was accidental. I fear now very much that it was not so—that the cause of her present absence lies deeper than we have any of us dreamed that it does.'

'That reminds me of another thing,' said Miss Lake assuming, as she spoke, a face of seriousness and mystery. 'I have sometimes thought that I was mistaken. But what has just occurred, convinces me that my impressions were not far wrong.

A BIGAMIST.—A man, who was lately convicted of bigamy, sought to excuse his crime by the plea that when he had only one wife she fought him all the time and never gave him a day's peace; but on marrying a second wife the two fought one another, and left him not only in peace and quietness, but also furnished him with "a better show than the circus." Nevertheless, he was sent to the Penitentiary for two years.

There is no one else who has the power to be so much your friend, or so much your enemy, as yourself.

THE PROSPECTS.

At any other period than the present the meeting of Parliament would have attracted a greater share of public attention. Their meeting in the new buildings alone might have drawn many to the capital, but the whole seems to pass almost unnoticed. The speech from the throne has not evoked that opposition nor given occasion for those outbursts of feeling that it usually does. The speech, itself, indeed contains nothing very extraordinary, merely referring to the new buildings, to a Board of Trade and the delegation sent to the West Indies and South America. It speaks warmly of the loyalty of the Canadian people, and the valor of Canadian Volunteers and notices favorably the action of the President of the United States in issuing his proclamation against the present infraction of neutrality by the Fenian outlaws. One thing appears satisfactory, viz: that although the expenses have been greatly increased by the troubles and annoyances of the last few months, yet the revenue has increased during the year equal to the increased outlay. Let us trust that they will not be deceived.

In referring to Confederation, it speaks with confidence, saying that the question has assumed such a position as to induce the expectation that it will shortly be carried into effect, and expresses the hope and belief that the present session will adopt such proceedings as may be necessary for completing the details of the scheme as regards this province, estimating also that the new Parliament will consist of Representatives from all the provinces. The discussion of the address was very brief, the only desire for delay being to hear the cause of Mr. Brown's resignation; this was refused till Mr. Brown would be present.

All the speakers referred to the gallant conduct of the Volunteers, and J. A. McDonald declared the government would ask the House to do something for the families of those who had fallen.

Col. Haultain, while bearing testimony to the gallant conduct of the volunteer force, took objection to the militia system as defective and unsuited to the requirements of the country.

Mr. John A. MacDonald said it would be useless now to organize an entirely new system for the Canadian militia, when in a short time, no doubt, the confederate Parliament could be called upon to devise a system embracing the whole of the province of British North America.

THE INVASION.

We feel certain that this great and long talked of invasion of British soil and the subjugation of Canada as a basis of operation for the liberation, is now over. We do not mean that there may not be more plundering raids, as it almost appears impossible that so many men could assemble at so many points, remain in idleness and drunkenness, and then return home quietly without doing mischief, more or less. It is more than can be expected. Therefore, the wiser way is to keep a look out for them for some time. There need be no fear of their doing much harm, but they can do a little. The mere passing through a section of the country and living on the plunder they might make would be serious loss to that section, but this is the most that need be feared.—Our troops are so stationed and increased that no very serious raid can be made without meeting severe chastisement from either the Volunteers or the Regulars. These marauders, however, have been very careful in their doings hitherto; they have not been so blood-thirsty as might have been expected, fearing, no doubt, that if they fell into our hands they would suffer severely for any act they might be guilty of. Fear of Canadian power and justice had a wholesome effect upon them.

The bands are breaking up every where. The United States authorities seized the leaders—Sweeny, Roberts, O'Neil and others—and much ammunition and arms. The prisoners have all been let go on either their recognizances or on Bail. President Johnston has issued a proclamation forbidding their transportation of arms or other things to the frontier, and charging the proper officers to do all in their power to prevent any infraction of the neutrality. This proclamation has had a very beneficial effect, and the Fenians now finding that the government is against them are returning, giving the affair up as doubtful. From Buffalo several hundreds have taken their departure; also from St. Albans, Malone, and other places. They now declare President Johnson anything but a gentleman, and assert that no Irishman should fight for the United States. The government offers a free ride home to all who are not able to pay, and this no doubt means the whole, and some of their leaders are advising them to return home for the present.

The American government was very tardy in coming forward to do their duty, but at the eleventh hour did come forward. Had they done so one week sooner the whole fizzle would have been stopped without blood on either side. We, however, have learned a lesson or two from the troubles; we have found that our Volunteers are ready, able, and willing to go and defend our homes, and that almost against a force five times their number. We have also learned how much we may expect from our neighbors if in danger, even from the robbers and plunderers of themselves. All is well that is done on Britishers. The whole press, one or two honorable exceptions, gave evident signs of rejoicing at the trouble that the freebooters were causing to us. We will be able to appreciate the kindness of the American people at present. We have learned, too, that there are not so many Fenian sympathizers in Canada as many would have been ready to expect,—only the rowdy scape grace part of the population, and only a few of them in one or two places have manifested much sympathy. The whole priest-hood is against Fenianism.

The Bishop of Kingston in a late sermon said that he deeply deplored the wicked invasion of the country by a mob of marauders and freebooters, to plunder the peaceable citizens of a country that did them nor their country any harm, but, on the contrary, afforded thousands of Irishmen happy homes, free altars and civil and religious liberties. These marauders were not true sons of Ireland, for the people of that loved land had disowned them and their organization. The Holy Father, Pius IX, had denounced them, the bishops and priests of both Ireland and America had denounced them. The Catholic Church had expelled them from her fold—for the fact of belonging to a Fenian organization was of itself sufficient to cause them to be excommunicated. They were not Catholics, for they had rejected both her advice and her teachings. It was the first time this cathedral had been desecrated by having pronounced within its sacred walls the hated name of Fenian, and he trusted it would be the last. It was unnecessary for him to inculcate loyalty to the throne and allegiance to the gracious lady that reigned over them. It was not only a duty, but an injunction sacred in its observance. He hoped there was not a Fenian in this city, or in all his diocese; and he believed that all Catholics in it were prepared like men to strike in defence of their altars, their homes and their little ones.—Surely it was not love of Ireland that induced the Fenians of Ireland to send emissaries among the Irish people to endeavor to undermine their faith, and to teach them to disregard the counsel and advice of their pastors—a people singularly devoted and obedient to the voice of the ministers of their holy religion. Was it sympathy for Ireland, or a detestation of the wrongs of her people, that influenced the pseudo-patriots to rob the hard-working and honest sons and daughters of Ireland in America of their well-earned dollars, in order that the leaders of this organization in debauchery and crime might injure this country? Surely it was not patriotism, but ruffianism of the most despicable character. Was it not rapine and plunder that induced the Fenian horde to cross the Niagara river and invade the homes of the peaceable inhabitants of that locality, and when resistance was offered, to shoot and slay the gallant defenders of the country, carrying sorrow and grief into many a Canadian home? "Soldiers and volunteers," the Bishop said, "this day do we invoke the blessing of Heaven upon you to keep and strengthen you in arms, and God bless and preserve you, for it is you who are the true patriots who, in the performance of acts of heroism done in nobly defending your country's flag, that are deserving of applause, that flag that has been borne gallantly by Irishmen through many a well-fought battle and on many a victorious field, in every quarter of the globe. It is Irishmen whose actions, both in the field and in the Council, have helped to make England great and respected in every clime, and whose escutcheon was never tranished by having in its ranks a recreant or coward." The Bishop concluded after inculating at some length the moral duties of Catholics towards Protestants, and towards each other, and enjoined peace, harmony and unity in the ranks of the people, at this the hour of their country's trial and said when he met a volunteer soldier his heart warmed to him, for he knew what great sacrifices he had made in leaving his home to defend our homes and firesides. The gallantry of the Canadian militia was a matter of history; their valor and their loyalty were undoubted and deserved not only the praise of man but the sanction of Heaven.

Suspension of the "Habeas Corpus."

The late incursions of those lawless ruffians, and the supposed sympathies of some of the Mike Murphy stamp who may be amongst us, besides, probably, some other information received by the Government, have induced the representatives of the people to pass an act suspending the Habeas Corpus Act. This will have a very healthy effect on those stragglers who pass to and fro from the United States, and many of whom are now or have been lately in Canada. They at least will be restrained from expressing their sympathy with those murderers and plunderers who have attempted to live at the expense of the industrious people of these Provinces. Too many of those lazy ruffians will not work and these willingly engaged in an expedition which promised them food, even though at the cost of blood, for the only thing they could hope to accomplish was plunder and murder.—The suspension of the act will ensure those caught in invading our soil, and those expressing their sympathies with them, a speedy trial, and sure punishment in outrageous cases.

But the suspension of the act is not intended or calculated to incommode citizens of Canada, or any other country, who mind their own business and do not intermeddle with ours. American citizens, no matter what their original nationality, may still pursue their legitimate callings without molestation, but those who may be found sowing discord or Feinanism in the country will be the easier brought to justice. Let us hope, however, that no uneasiness or trouble will be caused to unoffending persons. That there may be grave suspicions of their proclivities in the mind of some one, should not be sufficient cause to arraign them either before the magistrate or to accuse them before the public. More than mere suspicions should exist. There should be proof positive that either by word or deed they have rendered themselves amenable to the laws of the land.

There are without doubt many Roman Catholics who are not Fenians. The Church is opposed to the whole scheme, as every right thinking mind should be; scarcely any of the Priesthood will be found friendly to the brotherhood. As we before pointed out, it is a stroke at the Church itself; very few who have the interest of that Church at heart are in favour of the wild scheme of a Fenian Republic; none of that Church who have acquired property in the country are in favour of it. Still our own opinion is that there are a few reckless, regardless fellows, who have been in the United States and have returned, who are more or less imbued with the great idea of an Irish Republic, and with the idea of overthrowing the Saxon rule. The whole affair, however, has received a speedy solution, and those who have been tainted a little will hardly dare to exhibit their proclivities.

We have again and again pointed out the folly of aggravating peaceable unoffending citizens, either by word or deed. The Pope and Paddy McGuire should be allowed to rest in peace, enjoying their peculiar views, exhibiting nothing but good will towards every man, till proved guilty of something wrong, then let them receive their due reward, even though that be necessarily severe.

The Canada Farmer for June has been received. It is an excellent number, no farmer should be without it.

Young Men Leaving for the States.

During the present excitement and for some weeks before it, a number of individuals from Douro and Ennismore were known to have for the United States, and on some days last week the number equaled 25.—This, however, would not have been noticed at other times, and perhaps not even now, were it not that Catholics seek to attribute their departure to a fear for their lives, representing that under the present excitement they dreaded that the Orangemen would rise and murder them. Now such representations are without foundation, except in heated imaginations. At no period in the past have Catholics in this county been molested on account of their religious opinions. They are never interfered with because of their views on any matter, nor are there one half the disputes between Catholics and Orangemen that exist between Catholics themselves. On no occasion have they been deprived of anything they sought, except on the 17th of March a year or two since, when the St. Patrick's Society was not allowed to go in procession with their standards unless these standards were preceded by the national banner; nor were they stopt because they were Catholics, but because they refused to carry the Union Jack in the front of their procession, and their not doing so was reasonably construed into a spirit of disloyalty. Not a word of trouble has since been heard of; not a word has been uttered against them as Catholics, and how then they can excuse the present exodus into a fear of Orangemen seems to us a mystery. Again, they say they are looked upon by protestants as disloyal and tormented more or less about it, and infer that such a course is wrong and dangerous, if continued, as tendinding to force them into it. The ocurse is wrong and should not be indulged in, unless where proof is forthcoming; but we are unwilling to admit that they would be so easy induced to become disloyal; besides if they desire to escape the suspicions of their neighbors they can easily do so by remaining where they are, as only those who manifest their sympathies with the present movement either in word or deed arouse suspicions.

Prisoners.

During last week our little Town was enabled not only to send Volunteers to the front, but to add to the number of Fenian prisoners. Denis Brennen, well known both in Peterboro' and Port Hope, left here some time since and directed his steps quietly to the south of the lakes. No one wondered very much at this as many more were doing so, with the apparent intant of making a better of it. Mr. Brennen, however, returned about a week since as if to remain, but he having been seen in Fenian processions in Rochester, also having been heard drink toasts and use expressions that would indicate Fenian proclivities, it was found that Peterborough was not the place to remain in quiet, but his departure was hurried, from information that a coat of tar and feathers was being prepared for him. He therefore, not desiring such a dressing, departed on the train of the same day as his arrival. On his way down, however, he got into bad company again and was heard in company with others use language that cast stronger suspicions, and accordingly a warrant was issued for his arrest in Port Hope; but he eluded the vigilance of the Constables and made his way to Cobourg, where he was arrested next morning waiting to get away on the boat He was brought to Port Hope, and since has undergone several examinations, being defended by T. M. Fairbairn, Esq., of this place. It is reported that the evidence is strong enough to convict him of Fenian proclivities, and if so, he may get cheap board and lodgings at the County boarding house for a few months. He was examined on Tuesday evening and sent down to Cobourg. We have not received particulars.

Two Crowleys, from Otonabee, were taken at the same time; also one Healy, from Westwood. The Crowleys got off after first or second examination; Healy still accompanies Mr. Brennan, on the charge of being a Fenian Drill Sergeant for the Canadas, &c.

There can be little moral doubt of the guilt of the parties arrested, the only difficulty being the legal conviction. Scarcely an individual in town but believes they are guilty—their friends almost fearing testimony. It is reasonable, however, that they should have a fair trial and every reasonable opportunity of establishing their innocence, and if innocent acquit them; but if guilty, and it proved, treat them as double-dyed traitors and would-be-murderers, living in our midst and on our bounties, at the same time plotting our destruction. If guilty hanging would be too respectable a finale for them.

Since writing the above we learn that a petition was set on foot here for their liberation, and signed by one or two of our citizens. How these citizens could testify to their innocence is a matter for themselves to settle. One thing is certain, their testimony will have no effect on the minds of the majority of their neighbors; no one doubts the culpability of all the parties arrested, the only difficulty is sufficient proof.

The Cholera.

New York journals declare that on account of the arrival of several emigrant ships with cholera on board, the hopes of escaping this plague are diminished greatly, and declare it scarcely possible to arrest it. Very soon, therefore, the American people may be called upon to chronicle other things than Fenian bubbles. These same creatures will prove fit subjects for disease to prey on, when they may have to implore the aid of those they would now destroy. Let us pray that this may not come to pass.

The Town Council, at its last meeting, passed a resolution appropriating funds for the relief of the families of our noble Volunteers, who have left home cheerfully at their country's call to assist in repelling the banditti who were invading our soil. Messrs. Ormond, Stevenson, Toole and Hamilton, were appointed to find out and assist any in need of assistance. Those who may not be called on, requiring aid, should make their case known to either of these gentlemen.

More Canadians have arrived from the States to join the Volunteers in defence of their country. Among the first who came over we find the name of one from Peterboro, C. R. Rubidge, a member of Capt. Roger's Company, Ashburnham.

More Volunteers.—There are 32 new companies gazetted for Upper Canada—one of which is in Peterborough, and one Bobcaygeon,—and 20 in Lower Canada.

Two more volunteers of the Queen's Own are dead—Sergeant Mathieson and Private Lackey. The latter leaves a wife and family.

Lindsay Loyal.

The County of Victoria is the only county from which no volunteers have gone to the front, or offered to go. Mr. Cottingham, at Omemee, says the fault is the Government's refusing to arm and equip. This may be true so far as Omemee is concerned, but certainly will not hold good for Lindsay—as the people of Lindsay feel—from the following that has been handed us from Lindsay:

LADIES, ATTENTION!

THE YOUNG LADIES of Lindsay will meet at the Town Hall, to-morrow evening, at eight o'clock, "sharp," for the purpose of forming a Company to protect our young men, who are "too nervous" to join the Rifle Company.

Wanted—Sixty Elderly Ladies for the Home Guard.

This speaks volumes for the loyalty of the "men," say, rather the women of Lindsay. A Rifle Company is being formed there, but is it not too late?

Fenians Recruiting.

They have opened a recruiting office in New York. They first issued a bulletin that they had routed the British forces near Ottawa, horse and foot; and another that 7000 Fenians had passed into Canada at the Suspension Bridge, and thousands of troops were arriving to their aid. They next announce that a gold mine has been discovered on the St. Lawrence and that 2,500 laborers are wanted to work it, but this is to conceal their true design. Recruiting will be hard work in future.

The news about their gathering and camping at Malone, St. Albans, Buffalo, &c., is now becoming stale; no one cares more than to read it. They are everywhere dispersing. Their generals and leaders taken by American orders themselves without money or the hope of it, there is little to fear from another raid.

Anonymous.—We have received a short but pithy communication, without any signature, we regret, therefore, to be forced to reject it. Correspondents may rest assured that their names will not be given unless they desire it, but without the name we are forced to refuse insertion. The accompanying remarks in this case are no guarantee, as we could not comply with the conditions.

Personal.—We learn that W. J. Green, son of Mr. J. Green of North Monaghan, passed a very creditable examination and received a diploma at Bryant, Stratton & Co's Commercial College, Toronto. This school stands deservedly high in public estimation, and hence a certificate from it is a certain proof of proficiency in a commercial education.

What Fenians are Composed of.—Two of the prisoners taken at Ridgeway were well known in Hamilton as professional thieves and black legs. They plundered some stores at Ridgeway, but Detective Armstrong identified the scoundrels on board the scows attached to the Michigan, and was thus enabled to obtain their delivery to the Canadian authorities for trial. We trust they will now receive their just reward.

The New York Herald, Tribune and other papers are giving gross misrepresentations of the state of things here, and of the success of the robbers in Canada. Anything to feed the rabble of that Sodom of America.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—You will be glad to learn, that the Fishery Overseer for this division, Mr. Cameron of Cobourg, has been visiting some of our poaching fraternity here. Yesterday, Geo. Reid, Esq., J. P., upon the information of Mr. Cameron, fined one John McLochlan for spearing fish by torchlight. It is to be hoped that this will be a warning to others, as I understand the law will be vigorously enforced upon any other offender.—McLochlan's fine was light I believe, as he was the first offender brought up under the new Fishery Act.

Yours truly,
PISCATOR.

Keene, 4th June, 1866.

We are glad to learn that Mr. Cameron has taken the matter up, and we are sure he will not shrink from doing his duty.—Mr. Cameron is energetic and obliging in his social position, and we trust he will oblige sportsmen (?) to observe the law.

EUROPEAN.

GERMANY.

Invitations to the European Congress had been all accepted and it will meet in Paris shortly. Prussia, Austria and Italy were still arming. The Italian volunteers were mobilising rapidly. Austria had mobilised 600,000 men. The Prussians were concentrating at Glatz and Landshoet. Prussia and Italy had agreed to postpone hostilities till the congress had proved a failure. Orders for a second conscription in Vienna had produced great discontent. Italy engaged not to attack during the conference.

Hopes of war being averted were believed in only by the minority.

The Paris Presse says Austria's compensation for the loss of Venetia will be found in territory on the Adriatic coast. Prussia to have the Elbe Duchies, and Denmark to have Northern Schleswig, and the Rhenish provinces to be made a state attached to the Germanic confederation.

The Austrian General, Benedeck, had issued instructions as to how the troops were to behave in the enemy's country.

Italy was rebuilding her forts to resist the new artillery.

The Austrian army commenced marching towards Venetia on the 24th.

Turkey will occupy the Danubian Principalities, in consequence of the Russian and French declaration against Turkish intervention.

OPENING OF PARLIAMENT.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

On the 9th instant, the Parliament of Canada met at Ottawa for the first time. On the same day the House passed an act suspending the Habeas Corpus Act. This act seemed necessary because of the present raids on our frontiers, and because also of the supposed sympathy of some amongst us with Feinanism, and the fact that it is suspended will have a healthy effect upon those gentlemen, if any such there be. The following is the speech from the throne:—

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council;
Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly.

I am happy again to avail myself of your advice in carrying on the government, and I trust that you will find in the magnificent buildings erected in this city chosen by Her Majesty as the Seat of Government, increased facilities for the despatch of public business, whilst they will prove adequate to the great future of this country.

Immediately after the termination of the last Session of Parliament I convened by instructions from the Secretary of State for the Colonies a Council of Trade including representatives from the different Provinces of British North America. I have directed the proceeding of this body to its labors.

I shall direct to be laid before you the papers relating to the termination of the Reciprocity Treaty with the United States of America, and to the negotiations on the subject of our commercial relations with that country. It has now become still more imperative to open by an extension of the trade of the country with other nations, new markets for the varied products of our industry. In consequence of the notice for the termination of the Reciprocity Treaty, I thought it needful with the assent and approbation of Her Majesty's Government to send a deputation representing the Colonies of British North America during the winter to the West Indies and Brazil to ascertain the best means of developing and extending commercial relations with those countries. The period at which the delegation returned from their mission, their report could not yet have been presented, but as soon as received it will be communicated to you.

The threats and preparations for attack on Canada, constantly and openly organised in the United States of America, and known as Fenians, compelled me since Parliament rose, by the advice of my ministers, to call out for active service a large portion of the volunteer militia force of the Province. The spirit displayed by the people, and their ready response to my proclamation, have received the well-earned approval of Her Majesty's Government.

The events which have occurred within the last few days afford additional proofs of necessity for the precautionary measures adopted.—The Province has been invaded by a lawless band of marauders, but, I congratulate the country, they were promptly confronted, and within twenty-four hours compelled to make a precipitate retreat. I deplore the loss of life and sufferings which have been entailed upon the gallant body of the Canadian Volunteers in the engagement which took place in repelling so promptly the invaders who had attacked the country, and I feel assured that you will not omit to alleviate, as far as may lay in your power, the miseries so wantonly inflicted on many families. But while I grieve for their individual loss, I must congratulate the country that the first note of danger has shewn that Canada possesses in her Volunteers a body of men ready to peril their lives in defence of their Queen and country. The entire people have been incensed by recent occurrences, and it must now be apparent to all that the whole resources of the country, both in men and means, will at any moment be cheerfully given in repelling any invasion of their homes in the measures of defence which I have been called upon to take, I have received the unremitting support of the Lieut.-Gen. Commanding and of Admiral Hope. It is also a source of unfeigned pleasure to me to acknowledge the gallant devotion displayed by officers and men of Her Majesty's military and naval forces in Canada. I am happy to be able to state that the President of the United States has issued a proclamation declaring that serious infractions of the laws of the country have been and are being committed by evil disposed persons within the territory and jurisdiction of the United States against the British possessions in North America, and requiring all officers of his government to exercise efforts for the defeat of this movement. I trust the course thus pursued will prevent this country from being subjected to further attack from the citizens of a nation on terms of amity with Great Britain.

The maintenance of the force on active duty which the Government has been compelled to call out, has involved an expenditure to a large amount which was not provided for by the votes of last session. The accounts of this expenditure will be specially laid before you, and I feel confident that you will immediately pass a bill authorizing the unavoidable departure from the provisions of the Audit Act.

Recent occurrences show the necessity of extending to Lower Canada the Act Cap. 98 Consolidated Statutes for Upper Canada, to protect the inhabitants of that section of the Province against lawless aggressions from subjects of foreign countries at peace with her Majesty. It has also been necessary for the preservation of law and order, to adopt a course similar to that taken in the present session of the Imperial Parliament, for the temporary suspension of the writ of habeas corpus. I invite your immediate consideration of these necessary measures. I have fixed by proclamation the first day of August next as the time at which the civil code of Lower Canada, passed in the last session of Parliament, shall come into operation. The code of civil proceedings of Lower Canada as reported by the Commissioners, shall be submitted for your adoption during the session.

Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly:

I have desired that the financial accounts for the current year and the estimates of expenditure for the next year shall be laid before you I congratulate you upon the very satisfactory results of the commerce of the country during the past year. The revenue has been so largely in excess of the estimates as to enable me without inconvenience to provide for the heavy and unexpected charges entailed upon the country.

Honorable Gentlemen and Gentlemen:

The position which the great question of the union of the Provinces of British North America has assumed, is now such as to induce the expectation that the measure will be shortly carried into effect. I therefore hope and believe that it will be found practicable during the present session to adopt such proceedings as may be necessary for completing the details of the scheme as regards this Province, and I venture to express the confident expectation that the new Parliament which will be held within these walls will not be confined to an assembly of the Representatives of Canada, but will embrace those of all the Colonies of British North America.

I am happy to be able to congratulate you on the general prosperity which pervades all classes of the community in the Province and I pray that your councils may be guided by Divine Providence to secure that which is the true end of all Governments: the moral and material advancement of the great body of the people.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

On Friday last, immediately after the reading of the speech from the throne, the Hon. J. A. MacDonald, after briefly referring to the present unsettled state of the country urging the necessity of further prompt action on the part of the Government to guard against the encroachments of lawless marauders and the inclinations of internal foes, moved the suspension of any rules of the House to admit of introducing a bill suspending the writ of Habeas Corpus. The hon. gentleman at the conclusion of his remarks was loudly applauded.

Hon. Mr. Holton understood from the observations of the Attorney General West that no number of the Opposition would be debarred from expressing his opinion freely on the subject. For his part, he did not wish to offer the slightest opposition to the action of the Government in this manner. The Hon. John A. MacDonald had stated that the Government would not be responsible for the safety of the country unless the House would adopt the resolution, he would, therefore, willingly consent that the rules of the House should be suspended and submit to the immediate passage of the measure. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. J. B. E. Dorion wished to know the application of the Bill.

Hon J. A. MacDonald in answer said that the Bill would apply to parties known to have aided or abbetted the Fenian invaders of Canada, or who could be proved guilty of any overt act of treason in this Province.

Mr. J. S. Smith asked whether the suspension of the Writ would affect parties already under arrest.

Hon. J. A. MacDonald: "Yes."

The Bill was then read a second and third time and passed. Subsequently it was carried to the Legislative Council and there passed without amendment.

Hon. Mr. Cartier introduced a Bill to extend the application of an Act already in force in Upper Canada, by which persons charged with taking up arms against Her Majesty's subjects in this Province may be tried by a militia court martial, to Lower Canada. The Hon. Attorney General said that the Act had come into force in 1849 in Upper Canada, and he desired that its enactment should now be made to apply to Lower Canada.

The House then adjourned till Monday evening, at 3 o'clock.

The Habeas Corpus Suspension Act.

The Bill for the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus is as follows:—"Act to authorize the apprehension and detention until the eighth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven, of such persons as shall be suspected of committing acts of hostility or conspiring against Her Majesty's person and Government. Whereas certain evil-disposed persons, being subjects or citizens of foreign countries at peace with Her Majesty, have lawlessly invaded this Province with hostile intent: and whereas other lawless invasions of, and hostile incursions into, the Province are threatened, Her Majesty by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council and Assembly of Canada, enacts as follows:

1st. All and every person who is, are or shall be within prison in this Province, at any time after the day of this passing of this Act, by warrant of commitment, signed by any two Justices of the Peace, or under capture or arrest made with or without warrant, by any of the officers, non-commissioned officers, or men, of Her Majesty's regular militia, or volunteer militia forces or men of Her Majesty's navy, and charged with being or continuing in arms against Her Majesty in this Province, or with any act of hostility therein, or with levying war against Her Majesty in company with any of the subjects or citizens of any foreign State or country then at peace with Her Majesty; or with entering this Province in company with any such subjects or citizens with intent to levy war on Her Majesty, or to commit any act of felony on them, or with joining himself to any person or persons whatsoever, with the design or intent to aid and assist him or them whether subjects or aliens, who have entered or may enter this Province with design or intent to levy war on Her Majesty, or to commit any felony within the same, or charged with high treason or treasonable practices may be detained in safe custody without bail or mainprize until the 8th day of June, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven, and no Judge or Justice of the Peace shall bail or try any such person or persons so committed, captured or arrested, without order from Her Majesty's Executive Council until the eighth day of June, 1867, any law or statute to the contrary notwithstanding provided that if within 14 days after the date of any warrant of commitment, the same or a copy thereof, certified by the officer in whose custody such persons is detained, be not countersigned by a Clerk of the Executive Council, that any person or persons detained in custody under any such warrant of commitment for any of the causes aforesaid, by virtue of this Act, may apply to be and may be admitted to bail, 2nd. In cases where any person or persons have been, before the passing of this Act or shall be during the time this Act shall continue in force, arrested, committed or detained in custody, by force of a warrant of commitment of any two Justices of the Peace for any of the causes in the preceding section mentioned, it shall and may be lawful for any person or persons to whom such warrant or warrants have been or shall be directed, to detain such person or persons arrested or committed in his or their custody, in any place whatsoever within his province and such person or persons to whom such warrant or warrants have been or shall be directed, shall be deemed and taken to be to all intents and purposes lawfully authorised to detain in safe custody and to be the lawful gaolers and keepers of such persons so arrested, committed, or detained, and such place or places where such persons, so arrested, committed or detained are or shall be detained in custody, shall be deemed and taken, to all intents and purposes, to be lawful prisons and gaols for the detention and safe custody of such person and persons respectively. And it shall and may be lawful, and for Her Majesty's Executive Council to change the person or persons by whom and the place in which such person or persons so arrested, committed or detained shall be detained in safe custody.

3rd. The Governor may, by proclamation, and so often as he may see fit, suspend the operation of this Act, or within the period aforesaid again declare the same to be in full force and effect and upon any such proclamation this Act shall be suspended, or of full force and effect as the case may be. 4th. This Act may be altered, amended or repealed during the present session of Parliament.

The following remarks from a contemporary may be of use:—

"The warrant of commitment must be signed by two Justices of the Peace, and the offences for which parties may be committed are thus stated in the Act:

"With being or continuing in arms against Her majesty within this Province;

"Or with any act of hostility therein;

"Or with having entered this Province with design or intent to levy war against Her Majesty, or to commit any felony therein;

"Or with levying war against Her Majesty in company with any of the subjects or citizens of any foreign State or country then at peace with Her Majesty;

"Or with entering this Province in company with any such subjects or citizens with intent to levy war on Her Majesty, or to commit any act of felony therein;

"Or with joining himself to any person or persons whatsoever, with the design or intent to aid and assist him or them whether subjects or aliens, who have entered or may enter this Province with design or intent to levy war on Her Majesty, or to commit any felony within the same;

"charged with High Treason or treasonable practices, or suspicion of high Treason, or treasonable practice."

Magistrates, of course, know that the warrant of commitment must recite some one of these offences as the ground of commitment, else the warrant will be useless. So soon as the warrant is made out, a copy should be prepared and transmitted "to the Clerk of the Executive Council, Ottawa;" so that it may be countersigned by the Clerk of the Executive Council within fourteen days as required by the terms of the Act, as without its being so countersigned within that period it becomes valueless, and application may be made for bail or mainprize, as if the Act had not been passed. The duties and responsibilities thrown upon County Magistrates by this Act are very great; and should be exercised with great carefulness. The very power which this Act gives to arrest and incarcerate persons on suspicion, should make Magistrates careful not to abuse it.—But when a clear case is made out, justifying the suspicion, proceedings should be taken promptly, and above all within the terms of the States.

Property of Felons.—The Attorney General's Bill for abolishing forfeiture for treason and felony provides also for the care and administration of the property of convicts while under sentence of death or penal servitude, by the appointing of administrators or curators, to be remunerated by a percentage on the property. If the Court condemn the convict's property, they may also pay the costs of his defence, may pay his debts, may make satisfaction or compensation to persons defrauded by his criminal or fraudulent acts, although not proved in any court, and may make an allowance for the support of his wife and relatives dependent on him. The residue of the property is eventually to revert to the convict. A person convicted of treason or felony is to be thenceforth incapable (unless he shall receive a free pardon) of holding any military, naval, civil or ecclesiastical office or benefice, or other public employment, on conviction forfeiting the same and any pension or superannuation allowance payable by the public or out of any public fund. He is also to be thenceforth incapable of sitting or voting in either House of Parliament, or exercising any right of suffrage or other political franchise.—London Times.

Incidents of the Limebridge.

Among the first shots was that which carried its deadly message to Ensign McEachran, of No. 5 Queen's Own, in charge of the 4th section of Company 8, and who had found cover for his men under a rail fence. He rose on his knees and looked at the enemy, when he received a ball in the abdomen which passed almost entirely through his body. He fell, with the exclamation, "I am shot!" and was carried to the rear. He was quite sensible up to the time of his death, and occupied the last time he had to live in sending through Captain Edwards and others messages of affection to his wife.

Ensign Fahey, No. 1 Company, was shot in the leg, and Lieut. Campbell, of No. 8, received a wound in the arm. Captain Beaumont, when the panic seized the men, which was caused by the want of support and failure of proper commands being given by the commander of the brigade, was knocked down by the retreating men and trampled upon, receiving severe injuries in the breast.

While the column was retreating, two members of the University company No. 8, Queen's Own, Private D. Jones and Corporal Ellis, were taken prisoners by the Fenian forces; the former whilst staying behind to attend to his wounded comrade, the latter being overtaken he knows not how. After being captured they were marched with the rear guard of the Fenians as far as Ridgeway, where they met the main body of the Fenians returning from the pursuit, and afterwards marched them to Fort Erie. The two gentlemen speak in the highest terms of the treatment received at the hands of the Fenians.

Ensign Whitney, of Trinity College, who, during the action, was in command of the University company, their officer not arriving in time for the action, showed great bravery in leading his company up to within fifty yards of the Fenian line, fearlessly exposing himself to the fire of the enemy.

A curious incident is related of Corporal McLean, No. 9 University College, Queen's Own. Whilst escaping previous to taking aim at a Fenian, his rifle was struck on the upper hand, cutting the nose cap right away.

Capt. Sherwood, of the same company, had the band taken off his collar, and a piece taken out of his sleeve by a bullet, without being even wounded.

Private Biscoe, of Trinity College, was struck by a bullet, which took off the button on his shoulder, doing him no injury. About the last man struck was Ensign Fahey, Queen's Own, which was covering the retreat. He was firing the rifle of a fallen comrade, and when he fell he was left to a neighboring house and treated kindly by the Fenians.

Several members of No. 5 Co., Queen's Own, had a narrow escape from being captured by the Fenians through their perseverance in remaining out among the very last of the skirmishers; Sergt. L. A. Rattray, Corporals Bland and A. T. Elliot only escaping by the thoughtfulness of a farmer's wife, who supplied them with disguises, by means of which they made their way safely to Port Colborne.

Sergt. McIntosh, same company, had his rifle shot off, and was secreted for a time in a farm house. Sergt. Foster, No. 7 Company, was struck by a bullet opposite the heart, tearing his dress and grazing the skin, but leaving him otherwise uninjured. Private Alderson, No. 7 Company, Queen's Own, was shot through the heart, and Private Tempest, of No. 9, University Rifles, was shot through the head while doing their duty as brave soldiers. Private McKenzie, also of University Rifles, was found dead in the woods; and Private Newburn, of same company, died from exhaustion. These were all honor men of the University, Toronto.

The retreating column arrived at Port Colborne in the afternoon, the Fenians having given up the pursuit at Ridgeway Station. It was expected, however, that during the night an attack would be made upon the town, and all the men were accordingly kept at their post, to patrol the streets and the neighboring country.

At 6 a.m., on Sunday, the column, commanded by Captain Akers, of the Royal Engineers, proceeded by train to within two miles of Ridgeway Station, from whence they marched north into the country until they struck the road leading to Fort Erie, passing the battle field of the day before.

NEW YORK, 11th June.—A St. Albans dispatch says—On Saturday, about eight miles from St. Armand, a brigade of British Regulars charged upon the small portion of Spears army that had remained behind, and captured 16 prisoners.

Some of the Fenians were killed, but how many is not known.

This fight took place almost on the boundary line, across which the Fenians were compelled to retreat. The British had no idea of stopping on account of boundary lines and they charged forward across the line firing upon the retreating band of Fenians,—They also made some captures on American soil. This affairs has been reported to Gen. Meade who is at present investing it.

NEW YORK, June 11th—A Herald special from Montreal says that in the final fight near the line, only 40 of the Govenor General's body guard participated.

The Fenians were driven across the line with several killed and 16 captured, who were taken to Montreal.

A special from Ottawa says three schooners suspiciously crowded with men, passed down St. Clair river to-day. The gunboat Reecee went in pursuit.

The Canadian Government has applied to England for 8,000 additional troops, including a regiment of cavalry and a proper portion of artillery.

Three arrests were made at Ottawa, and warrants are out for the Fenians there numbering 68 and all are known.

A special from Ogdensburg, on the 10th, says 12 loads of war material have been captured by the United States authorities, also 15 case of Springfield rifles and 30,000 rounds of ammunition passed through Ogdensburgh within the last 48 hours.

A man named Michael Guerin, supposed to have been a Fenian, was shot on Thursday last, near London after some altercation. This should not be; let the law deal with Fenians. We hope Canadians will not be guilty of violating law by lynching even the guilty.

PROF. VELPANI.

Who is Prof Velpani? He was a man of obscure birth, but he has given the world a Remedy for bald heads and grey hairs, that will make his name immortal. Hair Restoratives are multiplying on every hand, but the great desideratum is to find an article that will accomplish the purpose for which it is designed without a thick, unpleasant and offensive sediment.

Prof. Velpani has discovered a method of dissolving the ingredients, and holding them in solution, so that there shall be no deposit, and yet without destroying the essential properties of any of the ingredients. It is pleasantly perfumed may be used at any time, is a splendid hair dressing without oil, and absolutely prevents the hair from falling off or turning prematurely grey.

Among the most important of modern Medical discoveries, stands

THE CANADIAN PAIN DESTROYER

As a Family Medicine, it is well and favorably known, relieving thousands from pains in the side, Back and Head, Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Sprains, Bruises, Cramps in the Stomach, Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Bowel Complaints, Burns, Scalds, Frost-bites, &c. &c.

THE CANADIAN PAIN DESTROYER

Has now been before the Public for a length of time, and wherever used is well liked, never failing in a single instance to give permanent relief when timely used, and we have never known a single case of dissatisfaction, where the Directions have been properly followed, but on the contrary all are delighted with its operations, and speak in the highest terms of its Virtues and Magical effects.

We speak from experience in this matter, having tested it, thoroughly, and therefore those who are suffering from any of the complaints for which it is recommended may depend upon its being a Sovereign Remedy.

The astonishing efficacy of the Canadian Pain Destroyer, in curing the diseases for which it is recommended, and its wonderful success in subduing the torturing pains of Rheumatism, and in relieving Nervous Affections, entitle it to a high rank in the list of remedies for these complaints. Druggists coming in from Medicine Dealers, in all parts of the Country for further supplies, andeach testifying as to the universal satisfaction it gives.

The Canadian Pain destroyer never fails to give immediate relief All Medicine dealers keep it. Physicians order and use it; and no family will be without it after once trying it. Price only Twenty-five cents per Bottle.

DARLEY'S
Arabian Heave Remedy and Condition Medicine

IS positively superior to any or all other preparations for the cure of Heaves, Coughs, Thick and Broken Wind, and all diseases which affect the Wind of Horses; also, as a Condition Medicine, surpassing everything of the kind; is easy to give, sure to cure, and safe in all cases and at all times, and does not prevent the horse from being worked while using it.

It cleanses the breathing apparatus, by removing from the air-cells the coagulable lymph, or that secretion which in Heaves clogs them, causing a difficulty in breathing, and by its action on the diseased part causing the mucous membrane to resume its natural dimensions, thus equalizing the circulation of the blood, and restoring the distended vessels to their natural size; by its use the horse's appetite is improved, all derangements of the digestive organs corrected, softening the skin, and giving to the coat a sleek and shining appearance.

See what the most popular and widely circulated periodicals say of our Establishment:

From the "Dispatch of January 25, 1865.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the announcement of Messrs. Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, Silver Ware, and Fancy Goods, in our advertising columns. We are personally acquainted with the members of this firm and know them to be gentlemen of sterling worth and integrity. Their stock of goods, for variety and extent, we have scarcely seen paralleled.

From the "Mirror of Fashion," March 1, 1865.

Messrs. Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, etc., opened on the 15th ult., and we venture to say that no finer display of goods was ever exhibited by any establishment in this city. The ladies thronged their bazaar almost to suffocation, although the streets were rendered nearly impassable by the melted snow and slush. We predict for them a wonderful success.

From the "Ledger," February 28, 1865.

Our lady friends should visit the extensive establishment of Messrs. Devaugh & Co., No. 15 Maiden Lane, if they wish to indulge themselves with a sight which they will long remember. Such a profusion of elegant Watches Chains, Rings, Earrings, and, in short, of Jewelry of every name, kind and description, we never before witnessed. Their silver and plated ware is superb and almost casts into the shade the other splendid establishments which have long been the boast of our city. It is estimated that their stock is worth not less than one million of dollars.

How You Can Get a Prize.

Send Twenty-Five Cents to us, and as soon as we receive it we will mail you a Certificate showing what you are entitled to. If the article or articles please you, send back the Certificate and One Dollar and we will forward you the article, no matter how costly it may be. If the article is not what you wish, state, when you send the Certificate and dollar, what other article of the same value you prefer and we will send it. If you wish more than one Certificate send us $1 and we will send five; for $2, eleven; for $5, thirty; for $10, sixty; for $15, one hundred.

Agents are wanted in the Army and in every place. We have an immense stock of goods to dispose of, and need a large number of Agents. Our terms to Agents are very liberal and some even of our Lady Agents are making from $5 to $20 a day We give Agents 50 per cent. on all Certificates they sell provided they remit not less than $1 for eight.

GREAT IMPROVEMENT IN

SEWING MACHINES.

EMPIRE SHUTTLE MACHINE!

PATENTED FEB. 14th, 1860.

Salesrooms, { 536 Broadway, New York, / 252 Washington St., Boston.

THIS MACHINE is constructed on entirely new principles of mechanism, possessing many rare and valuable improvements, having been examined by the most profound experts, and pronounced to be

Simplicity and Perfection Combined.

It has a straight needle, perpendicular action, makes the lock or shuttle stitch, which will neither rip nor ravel, and is alike on both sides; performs perfect sewing on every description of material, from leather to the finest Nansook Muslin, with cotton, linen or silk thread, from the coarsest to the finest number. Having neither CAM nor COGWHEEL, and the least possible friction, it runs as smooth as glass and is

Emphatically a Noiseless Machine.

It requires FIFTY PER CENT less power to drive it than any other Machine in the market. A girl twelve years of age can work it steadily, without fatigue or injury to health.

Its strength and Wonderful Simplicity of construction renders it almost impossible to get out of order, and is GUARANTEED by the Company to give entire satisfaction.

We respectfully invite all those who may desire to supply themselves with a superior article, to come and examine the Unrivalled Machine.

But in a more especial manner do we elicit the patronage of

Merchant Tailors,	Corset Makers,
Cloth Makers,	Gaiter Fitters,
Hoop Skirt Manufacturers,	Shoe Binders,
Skirt and Bosom Makers.	Vest and Pantaloon Makers,
	Dress Makers.

Religious and Charitable Institution will be liberally dealt with.

One half-hour's instruction is sufficient to enable any person to work the Machine to their entire satisfaction.

Agents wanted for all Towns in the United States, where agents are not already established. Also for Cuba, Mexico, Central and South America, to whom a liberal discount will be given.

Terms invariably Cash on delivery.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any Cologne, used to bathe the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headache, &c. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and has obtained a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by Demas Barnes & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

"Jas' so P—" Exactly P—Solon Shingle said; they were there "every time." If he felt 'owley' in the morning, he took Plantation Bitters; if he felt weary at night, he took Plantation Bitters; if he lacked appetite, was weak, languid or mentally oppressed, he took Plantation Bitters; and they never failed to set him on his pins again and firm.

Few persons want any better authority; but as some may, just read the following:

" " " I owe much to you, for I verily believe the Plantation Bitters have saved my life.

REV. W. H. WAGONER, Madrid, N. Y."

" " " I have been a great sufferer from Dyspepsia, and had to abandon preaching. " " The Plantation Bitters have cured me

REV. C. A. MILLWOOD, New York City.

" " " I had lost all appetite—was so weak and enervated I could hardly walk, and had a perfect dread of society. " " " The Plantation Bitters have set me all right.

JAMES HEMINWAY, St. Louis, Mo."

" " " The Plantation Bitters have cured me of a derangement of the Kidneys and Urinary Organs, that distressed me for years. They act like a charm.

C. C. MOORE, 354 Broadway, N. Y."

Mrs. O. M. DEVOE, manager of the Union Home School for Soldiers' Children, says she "has given it to the weak and invalid children under her charge, with the most happy and gratifying results." We have received over a hundred reams of such certificates, but no advertisement is so effective as what people themselves say of a good article. Our fortune and our reputation is at stake. The original quality and high character of these goods will be sustained under every and all circumstances. They have already obtained a sale in every town, village, parish and hamlet among civilized nations. Base imitators try to come as near our name and style as they can, and because a good article cannot be sold as low as a poor one, they find some support from parties who do not care what they sell. Over a Million Dollars Saved!

Gentleman:—"I had a negro man worth $1,200 who took cold from a bad hurt in the leg, and was useless for over a year. I had used everything I could hear of without benefit, until I tried the Mexican Mustang Liniment.—It soon effected a permanent cure."

J. L. DOWNING.

Montgomery, Ala., June 17, 1859.

"I take pleasure in recommending the Mexican Mustang Liniment as a valuable and indispensible article for Sprains, Sores, Scratches or Galls on Horses. Our men all say it acts like magic."

J. W. HEWITT,
Foreman for America, Wells, Fargo's and Harnden's Express.

"The Sprain of my daughters ankle, occasioned while skating last winter, was entirely cured in one week, after she commenced using your celebrated Mustang Liniment.

ED. NEELY."

Gloucester, Mass., Aug. 1, 1865.

It is an admitted fact that the Mexican Mustang Liniment performs more cures in shorter time, on man and beast, than any article ever discovered. Families, livery-men and planters should always have it on hand. Quick and sure it certainly is. All genuine is wrapped in steel-plate engravings, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook Chemist, and the private U. S. stamp of Demas Barnes & Co. over the top.

An effort has been made to counterfeit it with a cheap stone plate label. Look closely!

It is a most delightful Hair Dressing.
It eradicates scurf and dandruff.
It keeps the hair rich, soft and glossy.
It prevents hair turning gray and falling off.
It restores hair upon prematurely bald heads.
This is just what Lyon's Kathairon will do.
It is pretty—it is cheap—durable. It is literally sold by the car-load, and yet its almost increasing, until there is hardly a country store that does not keep it, or a family that does not use it.

Who would not be beautiful? Who would not add to their beauty? What gives that marble purity and distingue appearance we observe upon the stage, and in the city belle? It is no longer a secret They use Hagan's Magnolia Balm Its continued use removes tan, freckles, pimples and roughness, from the face and hands, and leaves the complexion smooth, transparent, blooming and ravishing. Unlike many cosmetics, it contains no material injurious to the skin. Any Druggists will order it for you, if not on hand, at 50 cts. per bottle.

Helmstreet's Inimitable Hair Coloring is not a dye. All instantaneous dyes are composed of lunar caustic, and more or less destroy the vitality and beauty of the hair. This is the original Hair Coloring, and has been growing in favor over twenty years It restores gray hair to its original color by gradual absorption, in a most remarkable manner. It is also a beautiful hair dressing. Sold in two sizes—50 cents and $1—by all dealers.

PIANO-FORTES.

DRIGGS' NEW PATENT.

ARE THE ONLY INSTRUMENTS constructed on a truly scientific principle. That have greater strength, and will remain longer in tune than any other Piano. The construction is simple and natural, all the extraneous lumber in the body of the instrument is dispensed with; the sound boards are merely two arched planks of thin wood, like the front and back of a violin; the strings are attached to a strong iron frame, which is separate and entirely independent of the case, thereby dispensing with the old harp form of 'stringing' by substituting straight bridges, preserving at the same time The Over Strung Bass, of which Mr Dascon is the inventor. By these improvements we gain much more vibratory power, at the same time preserving all its purity and richness of tone.

They have received the highest testimonials from the Press, and all the principal artists in the country, among which are:

Harry Sanderson,	L. M. Gottschalk,
Max Maretzek,	S. Thalberg,
Theodore Eisfeld,	Wm. Mason,
Herman Wellenhaupt,	A. Bazil,
Francis H. Brown,	M. Strakosch,
Wm. Henry Fry,	Charles Fradel

Mr. SIGISMUND THALBERG, the great pianist, says:—I have examined your new Piano-fortes and I cordially approve of its system of construction. Its principle, by which great increase of vibratory power is obtained, being very simple and perfectly philosophical. The tone is grand and noble; it has great capacity for sustaining the sound or singing, and its volume of tone or power I have never heard excelled in depth, purity and sympathetic sweetness.

Wm. HENRY FRY, late musical critic of the N. Y. Tribune says:—I have examined your newly invented Piano-Fortes They merit all the praise given to them by Messrs. Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strakosch, Mason and others. As regards the structure, they are original and philosophical; in purity, volume, and continuity of tone; in vocal verisimilitude, that governing excellence which enables the pianists to "sing" on the instrument. Your Pianos deserve the highest rank. Your invention, in my opinion, is destined to work radical changes in the manufacture of Pianos throughout the world.

From the N. Y. Herald, Sept. 5.—Upon a careful examination of Daisess Piano-Forte, we find the results obtained are a very fine singing tone, great purity and brilliancy throughout the entire instrument, not often found in Pianos constructed upon the old plan.

The N. Y. Times, July 13, says:—We have now an instrument without an equal. It can sing with a smoothe delicacy, perfectly unattainable on any other instrument; an ordinary player obtains with no exertion, the fullness of a Grand Piano Forte and they must speedily supercede the old styles.

GENTLEMEN:—Having thoroughly examined and tested the Piano-Fortes invented and patented by Mr. S. S. Dascon, I am of the opinion that the tone result ing from his improvements, as exhibited in the instruments under examination in point of richness, depth and brilliancy, equals that of the best Grand Piano-Fortes, and excells them in pure, musical and actual tone, power thus approximating closer to what I consider perfection in the instrument than has yet been achieved by any other system of manufacture.

Yours respectfully,

L. M. GOTTSCHALK.

FINKLE & LYON

SEWING MACHINE CO.

OFFICE 591 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

GUARANTEE.—After a fair trial, if any purchaser does not regard the Finkle & Lyon Sewing Machine as superior to any machine in market, he can return it and have his money. It has taken many of the highest prizes.—is less complicated than any other first class machine,—does a wider range of work without changing,—requires no taking apart to clean or oil, and no "lessons" to set needle, regulate tension, or operate machine.

N. B. Any Clergyman sending us two orders for Machines, shall receive one for himself as a present. The same proposition is extended to Professors and Teachers.

We have now completed our New Manufactory at a cost of some $200,000, including New Patents and important Improvements; and the object of the above proposition is to secure the immediate introduction of our improved machine into every town in the United States without incurring the great expense of a travelling agent.

This proposition cannot avail in towns occupied by our own agents.

Please send for descriptive Catalogue, with samples of sewing.

BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY

IN CANADA.

The following testimony from a well known and highly respected Merchant of Prescott, is corroborative of the general approval given to Dr. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY:

PRESCOTT, C. W., Dec. 8th, 1859.

Messrs. E. W. Fowle & Co., Boston.

Gentlemen:—

Being solicited by your Travelling Agent for an expression of opinion of Dr. Wister's Balsam of Wild Cherry, I with pleasure assert that it is, in my belief, the best remedy before the public for coughs and pulmonary complaints.

Having tested the article with myself and family, in case of severe coughs and colds, for years, with uniform and unexceptionable success, I unhesitatingly recommend it with full confidence in its merits.

Yours truly,

ALFRED HOOKER.

A Year After Marriage.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

A pause of breathless interest succeeded and then the speaker went on.

'Mr. and Mrs. Clarence had made up a little party, of which I was one, to visit the Chinese Collection. Mr. and Mrs. Lee were to be of the number. After waiting some fifteen or twenty minutes past the time for them to join us, Mrs. Lee came in to Mrs. Clarence's alone, and offered some lame apology or other about her husband's having made a previous engagement with some friends to go and see Celeste. I thought it a little singular. But her gay, lively manner convinced me that everything was right, so far as herself and husband were concerned. At the Museum she was in uncommon fine spirits—too fine. I even then suggested to some of the company. Every new object seemed to give her a new delight. We had passed several times around the room, glancing first at the whole collection, and then entering into a more minute examination of the curious things exhibited, when I observed a man with his hat drawn over his eyes, who seemed more intent upon looking at the people than he did at the curiosities. Something about him struck me as familiar, but the perfect resemblance in dress and figure to Mr. Lee did not occur to me, until we came close upon him as he stood at a case, apparently occupied in a close examination of the figures within. Mrs. Lee did not seem to notice this individual at first even though she stood almost beside him, as we all passed by the case of Chinese figures, chattering away as gaily as a bird. All at once, however, I noticed that she seemed to shrink away from this unknown person, and to become reserved and silent. Soon after, at her suggestion, we all left the saloon. I do not pretend to say that there was anything wrong in this. But under all the circumstances, I cannot help thinking it strange.'

'Strange indeed!' exclaimed first one and then another.

'Did any one else observe this?' was asked.

'I am sure I do not know. For my part, I did not feel authorized to allude to it, for fear of creating unjust suspicions.—But now, I am fully persuaded, that Mrs. Lee went to the Museum against her husband's consent, or unknown to him, and had come in there to watch her with a jealous eye.'

'I cannot tell, of course. If it was he, his conduct was certainly very mysterious.'

'I have heard ma' say, that his father before him was so jealous of his wife as to render their lives miserable'—came sliding into its place as naturally as could be.

'That explains the whole matter, then!' eagerly spoke up the young lady who had related the Museum affair. 'He was jealous of her. But upon whom could his suspicions have rested?'

'What men were with you?'

'None but Mr. Clarence.'

'Mr. Clarence! Is it possible that Mr. Lee could have been jealous of him?'

'I can hardly think so. Although I now remember that she was on his arm all the time, and directed to him nearly all her conversation, while his own wife had but little to say.'

'Is it possible! Really that is dreadful!'

'It is—indeed.'

'Well, I never would have thought that of Fanny Dale.'

'Thought what of Fanny Dale?'

'Why, that she, so soon after her own marriage would attempt to win the affections of a man from his lawful wife.'

'But who said that she had done any such thing?'

'Isn't as clear as daylight? Of course, it is!'

'There is, certainly, some good ground for the suspicion'—chimed in one whose love of scandal made her perceptions remarkably acute. 'I am afraid that here is a clue to the whole matter.'

'I cannot think so, indeed!' urged another, who was ever disposed to place on the unexplained actions of her friends the best possible construction. "Besides, it is not at all certain that it was Mr. Lee whom Miss Lake saw at the Museum."

"Who then was it, pray?" was the instant and triumphant expressed interrogation.

"That, of course, I do not know; but I had much rather think it was any one else than Mr. Lee."

"And so would I," retorted Miss Lake. "But I'm certain that it was he. If it had not been, why would Mrs. Lee have so suddenly and so instinctively shrunk away from him, and so suddenly changed from the liveliest humor in the world, to a grave and silent mood?"

"There certainly are strong reasons in favor of Miss Lake's conclusion," was the voice of the majority. And so it was voted that Mr. Lee had been jealous of Mr. Clarence, and that, somehow or another, this was connected with the sudden disappearance of the wife of the former.

"But I do not believe," urged one, after this point was settled, "that there was the smallest particle of truth in the suspicion."

"Nor do I."

"Nor do I"—

Responded nearly one and all.

"I don't know," objected Miss Lake, "how that may be. Matters hardly ever assume the imposing aspect that this has, upon merely imaginary grounds. My own opinion is that something is wrong."

"You do not mean to say that Mr. Clarence and Mrs. Lee were attached to each other?"

"I do not say it," replied Miss Lake.—"But this much is certain, things look very suspicious."

"It is dreadful, isn't it?" was uttered, by one or two, in tones meant to express pain and horror at the bare idea, but through which the enjoyment afforded by the scandal came gleaming out like rays of light through some transparent portion of a dark cloud.

"Dreadful, indeed!" responded others.

"Have you any idea what has become of her, Miss Lake?"

"I have my own suspicions, replied Miss Lake, the boldness and confidence of whose suggestions had given her the position of opinion-maker to the rest.

"And pray what are they?"

"I really do not know that I ought to give them utterance. Particularly as they implicate at least one person who may be innocent."

"Every thing said here will of course, be kept profoundly secret."

"Of course."

"Of course."

"I should never think of mentioning again."

"Nor I."

"And of course I should not. I feel too much concerned, for the sake of my friend, Mrs. Lee, in having the whole thing hushed up."

Thus urged, Miss Lake said, in a half whisper.

"I am afraid my suspicions are too true. But on your lives you must not breathe them, for to let them get abroad would create a world of trouble. In a word, then, my conclusion is, that Mr. Clarence knows more about this business than any one else!"

Hands and eyes were lifted in mute astonishment at the unexpected declaration, and well they might be.

After adducing reasons that fully convinced the credulous circle, eager in fact to be deceived, Miss Lake departed with her budget of scandle increased rather than diminished, to lay its contents open somewhere else.

CHAPTER IX.

Not alone in the circle where Miss Lake's suggestions passed current, was the mysterious disappearance of Mrs. Lee commented on with no very near approximation to truth. At almost every turn, Mrs. Woodman met some new false rumor, which she could only declare to be false, without feeling at liberty to give, in its stead, the true version.

"I am told," said one individual to her, on the day when the affair became public, "that Fanny's mother went off in the same way, and has never been heard of since."

"There is not a word of truth in it," replied Mrs. Woodman, compressing her lips firmly.

"You certainly must be mistaken."

"No, I am not. Fanny's mother was my intimate friend, I was present at her marriage—in fact, was her bridesmaid on the occasion. She only lived about five years after this event, during which time I saw her weekly. I was constantly with her during her last illness—and finally, saw her die. Her grave I can show you at any time, with her name engraved upon the headstone that stands upon the spot. No such occurrence as you allude to ever took place. But I will tell you what did happen. Her husband, Fanny's father, who idolized his wife, never while he remained here got over the shock of her death. In a few months he neglected his business, and after a year or two failed. He then suddenly left the city, and has not been heard of since."

"That is a different story, altogether. Yes, a very different story. How strange how people will [illegible] and always to make them appear worse than they really are. I have already met with a dozen different rumors, all in a degree prejudicial to either Mrs. Lee, her husband, or somebody connected with them, in which there is scarcely a shadow of truth. And what is more, people will stick to the bigotry, against my positive declaration that it is false, at the same time that they are fully aware that I have been on terms of the closest intimacy with Fanny and her husband."

"There is one singular rumor that I have just heard, among the many that are floating about, which does not reflect upon either of them. It is likewise one that I should like to see substantiated, if possible, as it may lead to a discovery of the place where Mrs. Lee has concealed herself."

"And pray what is that?" eagerly asked Mrs. Woodman.

"I have been told, that the moment Mr. Lee discovered the absence of his wife, he hired a carriage, and was driven out for several miles on the various roads leading from the city, under the expectation that she had taken the way to some secluded place in the country, and that he should be able to overtake her before she had proceeded far on her journey."

"So far you have heard true."

"I have also heard, that after continuing on one of the roads for some miles, a female was seen ahead, who looked like Mrs. Lee, and that as soon as she saw the carriage coming, she took to the woods."

"True also."

"That on arriving at the place where she had left the road Lee and the driver proceeded to search for her, one taking one side of the road, and the other the other side. That the driver found a woman, answering to the appearancer of the one seen ahead, and brought her by force to the carriage, or near to it. And that when Mr. Lee came up, he discovered the woman not to be his wife."

"All true."

"Now, it is said, that the driver has related something further."

"Indeed! And what is it?"

"He states, I am told, with what truth I do not of course know, that after he had wandered away nearly a quarter of a mile from the turnpike, he found a young woman, the same he had seen on the road, concealed in a little thicket of hedge-thorn. He says that he spoke to her kindly, and told her that she would have to go with him. But that she positively refused. He was then going to take her by force, when she pleaded so hard, adding to her pleading a bank bill of fifty dollars, that he could not withstand her importunities. Pocketing the money, which he preferred, on the principle that a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush, to the gentleman's verbal pledge for one hundred dollars, he promised secrecy and took his way back to the carriage. He had nearly reached the place where the vehicle stood, when another female passed near him, who bore some resemblance in her general appearance to the person who had been seen in the wood. The thought that by detaining her, under the hope that she might be the real individual sought for, after all, screaming as [illegible] the first violent hands upon the frightened creature, was bearing her to the carriage by main force, when Lee came up and discovered that it was not his wife."

'Can that indeed be true?' Mrs. Woodman said, in astonishment.

'Such is the rumor floating about to-day. I have heard it in several quarters. Is it new to you?'

'Altogether. I must see our distressed young friend at once, and inform him of it, that he may find out the driver and learn the truth of the story,' was Mrs. Woodman's reply, as she rose to depart.

It was several hours before she could find Lee. He had already heard the rumor, and had been endeavoring, but in vain, to discover the man who had driven him on the day alluded to. His own mind had been so agitated during the whole time he was in the carriage, that he had taken no notice of its number or appearance. Nor could he recall the dress or face of the driver. For nearly two hours he had been inquiring among hack-drivers and at livery stables, in the hope of discovering the man, but to no purpose.

The only course left was to advertise, which was done on the next morning, in the form:

'NOTICE.—The advertiser is very anxious to see the driver who, a few mornings since, took him in his carriage, or public hack, several miles from the city, on various roads, in search of a person who had suddenly disappeared. A note through the post-office to R. D., stating where said person may be seen, will come at once to hand.'

Day after day passed, and no answer came to the advertisement. It was renewed in a more urgent form, but no one responded to the appeal. If there was any truth in the rumor, the driver feared either that he would be held accountable for his detention of the one female, or he made to give up the bribe taken from the other.—At any rate, he refused to come forward, and all attempts to discover him proved abortive.

Day after day, and week after week had passed, and although large rewards had been privately offered to the police and others for any information that would lead, certainly, to the discovery of Mrs. Lee, nothing had yet transpired to solve the mystery of her absence. The strong excitement under which her husband had at first laboured, and which, for a time, threatened his reason, had given place to a gloomy, anxious, distressed state of mind. His business was almost entirely neglected, in [illegible] constant efforts to discover, if she [illegible] still living, the place of his wife.

Time rolled on until nearly [illegible] had elapsed, when, as Lee [illegible] one day, brooding over [illegible] idea that occupied [illegible] entered, and [illegible] interrupted Lee, grasping the man's arm with a suddenness that startled even the cool, deliberate farmer.

'I come from New Jersey, about ten miles from here, or thereabouts.'

'And the young woman you speak of? Has she a fair complexion, light eyes, and light hair?'

'Precisely—Couldn't have told it better if you'd seen her yourself.'

'Is she well?' was Lee's next question.

'Yes. Only she cries a good deal, poor thing, so they say.'

'Then she is not in your house?'

'O no, bless your heart! I couldn't take care of a lady like her. She's with one of our bettermost farmers, what can afford to hire like a gentleman. Since I've been in town, I heard about somebody's wife having gone off, and how her husband would give any man who could tell him where she was, the likes of a hundred dollars or so—a great of money these hard times—and so I thought I might as well come in for a share while it was going.—They told me to come to you, and so here I am, and 'spose it's all right.'

'Will you go with me to the place?' asked Mr. Lee.

'O, certainly.'

'Now?'

'Yes. Right off the reel, if you say so.'

'Then come with me at once.' And Lee instantly left the store, the countryman by his side. A carriage was hired upon one of the stands, into which they entered, after directions had been given to the driver to cross the river by the way of Market street ferry. About two hours from the time Lee left his store, they entered a pleasant little settlement, about ten miles from Philadelphia, or thereabouts, as his companion in the ride had stated.

'You'd better leave the carriage here,' suggested the countryman, as the driver reined up at a public house on the outskirts of a village, 'and go alone to Mr. Harmsden's that's where she is. I'd rather not be seen in the business, if I can help it, for I don't know whose ill-will I'm going to get. Howsomever, a hundred dollars is a hundred dollars, now-a days, you know.'

'Where is Mr. Harmsden's?' Lee asked, hurriedly, as he descended from the vehicle, trembling from head to foot, in spite of himself, while his chest labored oppressively in the effort to breathe.

'It's away over yonder, where you see the row of tall poplars.'

'That handsome white house, surrounded by orchards and gardens?'

'Exactly. That's the place, and the road is right before you. I'll stay here with the driver until you return.'

'And you are sure she is there?'

'O, certain. Everybody knows she's there.'

Waiting to hear no more, Lee started off at a quick pace, his heart throbbing so violently that he could distinctly hear every pulsation. A walk of ten minutes brought him to the house which his guide had pointed out. His coming had been observed, as he approached by one of the principal avenues to the dwelling, and he was met in the door by a gentlemanly looking man, who invited him, politely, to walk in. For some moments after Lee had become seated, his agitation was too great to allow him to speak.

'My manner, doubtless, strikes you with surprise,' he said, as soon as he could command words, 'but when you learn the nature of my visit, you will not wonder at my agitation. About two months ago, my wife, to whom I had been married only a few months, suddenly disappeared; since which time I have not been able to discover a single trace of her. About two hours ago, I was informed by a resident of this neighborhood that she was in your family.'

'I grieve that any one should have so trifled with your feelings, sir,' the man replied, 'but no such a person is, or ever has been in my family.'

The shock of this answer seemed, at first, more than poor Lee could bear.—Rallying himself, however, as best he could, he asked the name of the person he was addressing.

'Harmsden,' was the reply.

'Yes, that is the name,' he said. 'I was told that she, or, at least, a person answering her description, was in your family. And that she came into this neighborhood about two months ago, the time when my wife disappeared.'

'Who told you this?'

'A tall, rough-looking fellow, with a squint in one eye, who says that he lives somewhere about here.'

'The scoundrel! I understand it all now. And it is but right that I should explain the cause of the misapprehension that has led to such a cruel disappointment on your part. I have a niece, who has been residing with her mother in Burlington. For the last year, she has been addressed by a young man, who has recently fallen into idle and dissipated habits. Although the engagement of marriage had taken place, yet, as the girl's affections were placed upon the young man, it was by her mother that such a [illegible] naturally follow, unless she [illegible] ed from all intercourse [illegible] was accordingly sent to [illegible] about the time you men [illegible] no inclination, [illegible] society here, I purp[illegible] position to exclu[illegible] that it sh[illegible] or wh[illegible] gi[illegible]

CHAPTER X.

In a pleasant little retreat—a sunny spot—about fifty miles from Philadelphia, and far away from any of the great thoroughfares that sweep across the State in all directions, dwelt a young clergyman, named Leonard, with his gentle wife, and two sweet children. His simple minded honest-hearted parishioners, did not live together in a village, but tillers of the soil, their well cultivated farms, and neat white washed cottages, were scattered for miles around. Loving all men, and beloved by all who knew him, he daily filled up the measures of his usefulness in peace. The leisure that he could find from necessary study, and the cultivation of a few acres of ground, was spent in regularly visiting the different members of his flock. At home, innocence and peace brooded over his little household.—His wife loved her husband with a pure and unselfish love that could see perfections in him, while she thought not of herself.—And he looked upon her, and cherished her, with an inexpressible tenderness.

After a warm midday in July, when the sun had passed far down in the west, and the soft shadow of a neighboring mountain had fallen over the pleasant little dwelling of the clergyman, with his wife and his two children, one a babe at the breast and the other a merry little prattler of some three summers, he went out upon the lawn in front of his cottage door, that was gracefully festooned by a clambering woodbine, to inhale the cool refreshing air.

'Is not that some person moving along the skirt of the woods?' asked Mrs. Leonard, looking intently in the direction she had indicated, a few minute after they had become seated infront of the cottage.

'I do not see any one,' her husband replied.

'There, look just over the top of that cedar standing in the hollow. Now you will see it.'

'I believe there is some one there. A neighbor passing home, I presume,' and the clergyman turning his eyes in another direction.

Accustomed to depend on her husband's judgment, which she had proved to be correct, in almost every that did not come specifically within her own province, and require her own decisions, she thought it very probable that his remark expressed the truth in regard to the individual seen in the distance, and therefore she suffered her attention to be interested in something else.

They had been seated on the lawn for about half an hour, enjoying the influence of that calm, holy, refreshing season, their minds, by a few well-timed remarks from the husband, elevated from nature up to nature's God, when Mrs Leonard said, with some concern in her voice.

'See, Henry! Although the twilight is just ready to fall, the person we noticed in the edge of the woods is there still. Who can it be? If my eyes do not deceive me, it is a woman. Yes, it is—for see! she stands in the open fields. She cannot be one of our neighbors. Go quickly, Henry. It may be some wandering stranger who has lost her way—go, and [illegible] for a bed for the night, if she needs [illegible]

Mr. Leonard never needed a second word to prompt him to the performance of a kind deed. He was beyond the [illegible] his wife's voice ere the last word uttered. The woman, for Mrs. [illegible] eyes had not deceived her, [illegible] ing about a hundred yards or [illegible] the dense forest, until the you[illegible] had passed nearly half the dis[illegible] cottage to the spot where [illegible] Then she turned and ran [illegible] He had approached near [illegible] that she had a very youthful [illegible] was dressed in a style [illegible] humble maidens of that [illegible] hood. [illegible] the sky indeed! [illegible] lit up the heavens, and a [illegible] roll of thunder gave evidence [illegible] rapid gathering of the airy [illegible] hosts to battle.

'Heaven grant that they may find the poor creature!' she had just murmured, when an almost imperceptible noise caused her to turn quickly toward the door. She might well be startled at the apparition that met her eyes. A female figure stood in the entrance to the cottage, regarding her steadily, with a fixed, wild, unearthly look—her lips drawn tightly against her teeth, her hand partly raised, and her whole attitude, as it struck Mrs. Leonard at the moment, that of a person about to bound forward with the purpose of seizing the object upon which her eyes were fixed.

An instant, and the strange being put her finger to her lips, while the rigidity of her features softened, and her countenance assumed a gentler aspect—

'You will not hurt me I know,' she said, stepping timidly in. 'Women are always kind and gentle.'

'No, Heaven knows I will not hurt you!' Mrs. Leonard replied, instantly rallying herself, although she trembled all over like a leaf.

'I wanted to come all day,' resumed the stranger; 'But I saw a man here. Men are hard, and hard, and cruel. But you are alone now, and I am not afraid. You will not hurt me?'

'Hurt you!' rejoined Mrs. Leonard, becoming more and more reassured every moment. 'O, no, I would not hurt you for the world. I will love you.'

'Love me! O, will you love me?' And a sweet smile flitted over her young and beautiful face. 'A woman's love is pure. But man's love?' The expression of her countenance changed. 'It is a selfish love of dominion over the weak.'

'Do not think of that, my dear young friend,' urged Mrs Leonard, going up to her, and taking her unresisting hand—'but come with me, and you shall have a nice bed to sleep on. I know you are weary. Come! I have a little room that has been waiting for you, and it shall be yours as long as you chose to stay with me.'

'Then I will always stay with you,' was the stranger's prompt, innocent reply, while cheerful smiles were about her young face.

'Come, then, let me show you into your little chamber,' Mrs. Leonard said, lifting a light from the table upon which she had laid her work, and moving toward a door upon the left of the room in which they were standing. She was anxious to get her to bed before her husband came in, for fear that his presence would alarm her.

[illegible] facts," and, of course, of [illegible] the public against the prin- answer we are willing to gi- have written we have written.

The first paragraph of the letter appears to insinuate that we gave false impressions of the evidence, to which we plead "not guilty," as we did not refer to evidence at all; we merely refered to the impressions that were received by the public here, and which were generally believed, and are.

That Brennan was seen in a Fenian procession in Rochester is still reported, and believed by some. The proof before the court is wanting.

That Healy admitted his connexion with Fenianism is sworn to by Lattimore, and that connexion was as a drill-sergeant. See report of Lattimore's oath in Review:—"I asked him (Healy) what he followed in the States; he said he was a drill-sergeant and that he was to get twelve dollars a day for drilling them. I asked him who he meant; he said the Fenians."

In regard to that "petition" or "instrument" sent down, we did not pretend to give its wording. We said it was intended to induce their liberation, and this we are sure will not be denied by the signers of it. That they signed it with all good conscience, we did not deny; that public opinion here was against their doing it, we asserted, which was true.

We fail, therefore, to find a single instance of "a statement at variance with real facts," where facts were alluded to. Opinions were given, and may be received or rejected according as they appear well or ill founded.

We do not desire to lengthen the discussion, or to keep up any feeling in the matter; the best way is to drop such things at once. Fenianism is dead in Canada—because powerless, and for us to keep up the name by words, with either friend or enemy, we will not. Yet what we wrote we believe correct and agreeable to facts.

The Board of School Trustees.

There has been no meeting of the Board for some time, for want of a quorum; even at a special meeting, on Tuesday evening last, four members only appeared, their names are—Dr. Burnham, Messrs. Stevenson, J. Gilmour, and Helme. Those absent—Messrs. Clarke, Dumble, Hamtain, Poole, McRae, Leady, Cameron and Coulter.

European.

War is now inevitable in Europe as per last advices. A Congress is abandoned.—The powers are arming, the war will be terrible.

VOLUNTEERS HOME AGAIN.

THEIR RECEPTION IN ASHBURNHAM

THE LUNCH A GREAT SUCCESS.

On Monday afternoon the Rifle company returned to their homes, safe and well, not having met a fenian, or one bold enough to say he was one. A large number of people went down to the station to witness their arrival, and welcome them back again.—Rev. Mr. Clementi, we are told, made a very neat welcoming speech on the occasion.

On Tuesday the other companies, Capt. Kennedy's, Capt. Roger's, and Capt. Leigh's, returned on the noon train; they were accompanied by Mr. W. Philp's brass band, of Port Hope. Some thousands of citizens awaited their arrival by the train, and many were the greetings and pleasant were the faces of the spectators on their landing.—Had they returned from driving every living fenian in the United States into the Atlantic Ocean, they could not be more gladly received by their friends. On the Market Square where they assembled, the Mayor and Town Council, together with the Warden of the County, and a few of the members of the County Council, Sheriff Hall, and numerous other citizens met them, when Mayor Scott read the following address:—

To Major Poole, and the officers, non-commissioned officers and privates of the Peterborough County Volunteers.

The members of the Town Council of Peterborough, representing the people of the Town, have met you here to-day, upon your arrival, to welcome you back again to your homes, and in the name of the people whom they represent, and in their own, to express to you their heart-felt and sincere gratitude and thanks for the credit and the honor which your cheerful response to the call of your country has reflected on this community.

A few short hours from the landing of the forces of the enemy upon our frontier, and regardless alike of your wives and your families and your personal interests, you were on your way to convince them of the material of which the Canadian Volunteers are composed. An untoward circumstance alone, we learn, interfered to prevent you dividing the l urels that have been so profusely and so justly accorded to the "Queen's Own," and we hesitate not to say, "knowing who you are and knowing the composition of your ranks, that your gallant bearing upon the field of battle would have shewn forth equally with the best of those brave men who drove the enemy from our shores.

It is a source of sincere and earnest gratification to the loyal people of the Canadas that their citizen-soldiers have gone forth with so much of alacrity and so much of patriotic zeal to hurl back from our soil the vandal tread of a ruthless and rapacious foe, who are not entitled to the consideration of belligerents, but who in the acceptation of International law are plunderers and marauders, the citizens of no country, the enemies of all nations; and coming still nearer home, it gives us unmeasurable pride to witness the cheerful and zealous departure of so many brave men from amongst ourselves toward the port of danger. Be assured that a grateful remembrance of the Canadian Volunteers will never be absent from the citizens of Canada, and have an equal assurance that the loyal mind of this community will never be without its recollection of those brave men from our midst who have signified their willingness to sacrifice everything else to the call of their country.

The notice of your return has been so brief as to obviate any material expression of respect and admiration upon your arrival, but we have not been unmindful of you absence nor of the interests you left , we hope to convince you that may find a more tangible ex- future.

Mr. Ingram hailed them back with pleasure, so much so that words could not utter his joy; he felt that those brave fellows who went at their country's call and at the peril of their lives to drive those lawless marauders from our coast, deserve more than words, and he hoped that the County Council would offer some more tangible token of their appreciation of the noble services of the brave Volunteers.

Capt. Rogers and Lieut. Rogers, responded. Both spoke favorably of the treatment they and their men had received at Kingston, and declared that the kindness of the people of Kingston could not soon be forgotten by the Volunteers,

Ensign John Burnham, being called on, said that he felt that thanks were due to the ladies and people of the village, yet they had gone expecting no reward; they had seen the country, and as he looked on the green fields and beautiful homes on his route he felt that no band of marauding ruffians should be allowed to remain on our soil.

Capt. Rogers then proposed "The Ladies of Ashburnham," remarking that he knew, if called out, the ladies would most willingly go along. Lieut. Rogers also remarked that if Ashburnham ladies were on the commissariat department there would be no fear but plenty provisions would be on hand.

D. Haggart responded for the ladies.

Rev. Mr. Clementi proposed the Chairman, Mr. Dunlop, which was received with all honors.

The Volunteers proposed Major Rogers.

Mr. Rogers remarked that although he was not present in person his heart was with the volunteers, and he felt that if they had to go into a bad place, he would have to go to be with them. He welcomed them home, and was glad to see them, as all were, and they had done what they could to show it.

Capt. Sutherland proposed the "Warden and members of the County Council present" P. Pearce, Esq., responded in a very forcible speech, remarking that the County owed a debt to the Volunteers they could not repay, but he hoped that the County would do what it could to repay it, and at as early a period as possible, by voting something for the Volunteers and their families. He would do so, and he knew the whole Council would do so. He praised the ladies of Ashburnham for their energy and hospitality, and remarked that he felt that rather than allow fenian outlaws to overrun our fair country, the ladies would take up arms.

The lunch, or rather dinner, certainly was in the right time. The wonder is how it was got up in so short a period, only two or three hours being given; but although the ladies of Ashburnham received most flattering encomiums, we certainly think they well deserved more. We dare not individualize, every one, young and old, did her part so well; and if all the daughters of Canada are like those of Ashburnham, never shall a Fenian occupy a foot of our glorious and happy country.

We regret space forbids our giving the particulars more minutely.

On Monday next, the 25th instant, the Ontario Bank is to commence active business in Peterboro', by the establishment of a branch [in the building next the Post office] under the management of Mr. Eastwood, formerly of the Montreal branch, a gentleman of whose urbanity and capacity report speaks very favorably. This bank has now been established about ten years, having its head office at Bowmanville, in the neighboring county. It has been very successful, and as a consequence has steadily grown in public favor. Having ample capital we doubt not but that it will secure a fair share of the business of the merchants and manufacturers in this locality.

We understand that it is the intention to establish a Saving's Bank in connection with the Peterboro' branch. This gives us especial satisfaction, as the want of such an institution must have been much felt by those in this community who have enjoyed these advantages in other places.

Accumulated savings when kept at home may be lost by robbery or consumed by fire. They may also be a temptation to crime; deposited in a Savings' Bank your money is safe; temptation is put out of the way of those who may have a knowledge that you keep it in your house. Or in other words, you not only make your money safe, but possibly your life. In addition to this your capital gains from interest, at the same time you are in such a position that you can have it when needed. Nothing more need be said to recommend this institution to this intelligent community. We repeat that we are glad that a Savings' Bank is to be opened in Peterboro', and we hope that the Ontario Bank may do such a business, in the Branch and Saving Department, in Peterborough as may be satisfactory to the President and Directors.

PERSONAL.—We see from the Canada Gazette that Mr. John Crerar, late of the Bank of Montreal here, has been assigned the position of No. 1 in the Hilary Term Examination, for the Law Society, at Osgoode Hall. Mr. Crerar was prepared by our respected Principal of the Grammar School, Mr. King, and that his pupil, among 19 that were examined, took No. 1 position must be a matter of great satisfaction to him. Not a pupil that ever Mr. King prepared for examination has ever been plucked, and we are not aware of the failure of any of the pupils of the Peterborough Grammar School, something of which we should feel proud, as we should also, be willing at all times to award honor to whom honor is due.

Presentation.

The non-Commissioned officers and privates of the Peterborough Rifle Company, presented Color-Sergeant William Johnston, with a purse containing about 25 dollars, as an acknowledgement of his invaluable services in connection with that company for the past 11 years. The presentation took place in the Town Hall here, shortly after [illegible] return of the company from the frontier. [illegible] was presented by Private Knapp, [illegible] the company, who made a suit- [illegible] occasion, and which was [illegible] Sergeant Johnston. [illegible] to know that [illegible] seen remem-

[illegible] On the motion of [illegible] fellow, an order was given for a new [illegible] for [illegible] one, two, and three.

The members of the Council expressed their views to the Reeve, concerning certain subjects likely to be brought under the notice of the County Council at its next meeting, and hoped that they would receive due consideration,

COM.

Examination—Change of.

We are requested to state that the examination of the pupils in Miss Kyle's room will take place on Friday, 22nd instant, fore noon, instead of Monday, 25th, as before arranged, and we hope that parents and friends of the pupils will make it a point to be present on Friday.

BIBLE CHRISTIAN SABBATH SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY SERVICES.—On Sunday the 24th inst. sermons will be preached in the Church by the Rev. Jas. Hodge of Hampton, in the morning at half-past ten, in the afternoon at half past two, and in the evening at six. A Tea Meeting on the following Monday evening at six o'clock. Several ministers are expected to deliver addresses.

A friend from Smith writes us that friends of Mr. Thos. Hetherington, Smith, met on his farm on the 15th inst., and turned 24 acres with 15 teams, doing their work well, equal to the best ploughing ever done in the County. Certainly a good days work to be performed as a "bee."

We are glad to learn that Capt. King, of the Welland Canal Field Battery, is now fast repovering. When Mr. King left Buffalo, on Wednesday last, the doctors had declared him past danger. The following, in reference to Capt. King, we copy from the Leader of 18th instant:—

"HONOR TO A BRAVE VOLUNTEER.—The following has been delivered to Capt. King, of the Welland Canal Field Battery, now lying in a precarious state from his wounds:

'To Capt. Verner Clifton. — The guns will be restored and every facility given for making this (the Welland Canal) an efficient Battery. Lord Monck thanks Capt. King for his gallant behaviour and is sincerely grieved to hear of his serious wounds.—Please forward this to Capt. King.

P. R. McDOUGAL,
Adjutant General.'"

On Mr. K's recovery it will be gratifying to him to learn that his gallantry has been so generously acknowledged by Lord Monck, although but a trifling compensation for the loss of his foot.

The service of the Volunteers in the present emergency will, no doubt, be suitably acknowledged by both the government and grateful fellow citizens.

COUNTY COUNCIL.

The County Council met on Tuesday evening. Present,—R. Ingram, Esq., Warden, and Messrs. Dunlop, Carnegie, Dean, Probert, Gilmour, Pearce, Scott, Lucas, Miller, Grover, Melville, McCarthy, Patterson, Kidd and Peck. Messrs. Carnell and Fitzgerald, absent.

The minutes of the last day of the last session were read and confirmed.

The Warden's address then followed.

The address refers to the late invasion of Canada and the action of the Volunteers, recommending some tangible acknowledgement of their services. It also refers to the subject of a Drill Shed and other matters common at this session.

On motion of Mr. Carnegie, seconded by Mr. Dean,—Messrs. Dunlop, Dean, Pearce, Scott, Gilmour and Peck were appointed a committee to whom was referred the Warden's address.

On motion of Mr. Carnegie, seconded by Mr. Dean, — Messrs. Gilmour, Grover, Pearce, Peck and the mover were appointed a committee to equalise the Assessment Roll.

The Warden read a letter from the Registrar of the county, asking that claims caused by new registry law be paid, and that the Council would authorise the Treasurer to pay future claims when the accounts would be presented. Referred to Finance Committee.

Mr. Lucas presented a petition from C. Austin and 84 others, of the township of Minden, praying for the separation of the township of Dysart from the township of minden; also one from Adam Patterson and 52 others of the township of Dysart, on the same subject, and on motion of Mr. Lucas the petitions were referred to the Committee on Petitions.

WEDNESDAY.

The Committee to whom the address was referred yesterday, in their report fully responded to the sentiments of the address in reference to the Volunteers. They recommended that the sum of ten dollars be given to each Volunteer, Private and non-Commissioned Officer who did duty at the front; and that a dinner be given to the Volunteer Officers of the County, and that a Committee be appointed to confer with the members of the Town Council on the matter.

This report was received, and on motion of Mr. Carnegie, seconded by Mr. Dunlop, adopted; and Messrs. Carnegie, Dunlop and the Warden were appointed a committee to confer with the Town Council to carry the recommendation into effect.

It is understood that the Volunteers will be called together on Friday, when they will receive the gift of the Council, and in the evening a dinner to the officers is expected to take place.

MONAGHAN TOWNSHIP COUNCIL.

June 18th, 1866.

A special meeting of the Council was held at six o'clock, p. m. All the members present. The Reeve explained the reason why he called the Council together, which was partly in consequence of laying before them the necessity which existed for making provision for the families of some of the Volunteers now absent on duty.

On the motion of Mr. Collins, the Council was unanimous in granting such assistance as was deemed necessary for their comfort.

A communication was received from John Reid, Esq., P. L. S., tendering to provide and plant the monuments along the western boundary of the Township at the rate of $10 per stone.

On the motion of Mr. Robson, the Reeve was requested to have same confirmed.

On the motion of Mr. Dundass, the Clerk was directed to write to Mr. Dolbin, requesting him to move the fences off the road across the 11th concession to the full width, sixty-six feet, so as to avoid subjecting the Path-Masters to any further inconvenience in the discharge of their duty.

On the motion of Mr. Goodfellow, an order was given to the Reeve for $23.25 being the amount paid in charities up to this date.

On the motion of Mr. Dundass, the Reeve was requested to give no more charities unless petitioned for by the Rate payers of the [illegible] except in cases of pressing ne-

Theatrical.

The Grand Comedy Combination Company, of Rochester, under the management of Messrs. Daly & Cline, propose to present our people with a series of dramatic exhibitions. These gentlemen have with a discriminating regard, for those whose patronage they solicit, selected the elite of the artists, who during the Metropolitan Season, have entranced the fashion and beauty of New York votaries. Discarding the serious drama, and heavy stage effect, they will confine the character of their performances to light comedies and vaudevilles, combined with the melo-dramatic. The frequenters of Winter Garden, the Olympic and other first-class resorts in New York cannot fail to recognise among the members of this company some of the brightest ornaments of the American stage. Due notice of their appearance will be given through these columns.

To the Editor of the Peterboro' Examiner.

SIR,—The following resolution was unanimously adopted at the last meeting of Friendship Temple, I. O. G. T., and at the earnest request of some of the friends for its publication, I hereby forward it to you, requesting that you give it a place in your first issue, and thus do a favor to the temple.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.
W. J. MASON, Sec.

Moved by Bro. R. Rutherford and seconded by Bro. Mason,—That this Temple feels assured that it is quite compatible with its aim and object to express an opinion upon the late wicked attempt to invade this Province by a set of unprincipled men calling themselves Fenians, and wish to enter upon our record our unqualified and determined opposition to all such attempts to invade our rights, and our determination to uphold our country and our Queen against all foes whatever, and by whatever name they may be called. That we more especially deplore at this time to welcome home again those brethren belonging to our gallant Volunteers who so nobly rallied at the call of their country to go forth with their lives in their hands in defence of our hearths and our homes, and we would not only honor them for their patriotism, but for their consistent and unswerving adherance to our temperance principles, though surrounded by all the temptations incident to a soldier's life; and utter our fervent prayer that God may long spare them to be the defenders of our homes, and to adorn our temperance principles.

County of Peterborough Volunteers.

To the Editor of the Peterborough Examiner.

SIR,—I regret that I was unable, in consequence of the unexpectedly brief duration of my visit to Kingston, to comply with the request you preferred that I would write to you from thence anent the aspect of affairs in that city. In point of fact, however, you remained no less by the occasion, inasmuch as there was but little information of any interest, save such as was contained in the Globe, to convey to you.

I arrived at Kingston by that excellent steamboat, the Gravina, at 2.30 o'clock on the morning of Tuesday, the 12th instant. The streets of the town presented no unusual appearance, but were quiet and silent as the streets of Peterborough at the present date. It was not till I had been ashore an hour that I saw even a single policeman, the sole perambulating occupant of the street; about half-an-hour afterwards a solitary Volunteer presented himself. Later in the morning, however, a more lively scene might be witnessed when the Volunteers assembled for parade.

I accompanied them to their parade-ground at Barryfield, across the Cataraqui bridge, and was greatly pleased with the steadiness and discipline they exhibited. But, what will be even more interesting to our county in the satisfactory report I have the pleasure to make respecting the manner in which our own Companies conducted themselves, while off duty, during their stay in Kingston.

2050 Volunteers, including Artillery, Cavalry, Infantry and Rifles were billeted in the city, and I was informed, and, I need scarcely add, the information afforded me the greatest gratification, by two of the resident clergy as well as by other civilians, that although they had purposely been out at all hours of the night, they had never seen a single instance of misconduct on the part of our Volunteers. Four Privates of the Peterboro' Rifles were billeted at the house of a personal friend of mine, who expressed to me the high sense he entertained of the exemplary conduct of his temporary inmates.

I accompanied the officer upon whom devolved the duty of paying the billets of the men of his Company, and it will, I feel assured, be gratifying to the county of Peterboro' to know that when he expressed a hope, as he did at every house, that the men had conducted themselves well, the reply was, on every occasion, invariably the same in substance, that no men could possibly have behaved with greater propriety. In fact, having been with them, myself, in Port Hope, in Kingston, and in Cobourg, I have no hesitation in affirming that the county of Peterboro' has every reason to be proud of its battalion, and that it is not excelled, if indeed it is equalled, by any battalion in the Province.

Their campaign has been a short and a bloodless one, but, had their services been required on the battle-field; instead of simply on the parade-ground, those services would have been rendered with equal, if not with greater, alacrity; and I am proud to believe that should their country make any further call upon them, that call will be instantaneously and enthusiastically responded to.

But one feeling prevades their hearts, a feeling of disappointment that they have had no opportunity of meeting the band of thieves and vagabonds who have dared to threaten our soil with the pollution of their presence; for they are assured that, fighting as they would have fought, in so good a cause, the cause of their Queen, their country, their hearths, their altars, there could not have been the shadow of a doubt respecting the issue of the contest.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
R. A.

Lakefield, June 18th, 1866.

With much pleasure we insert the following extract from a letter to a friend in Peterborough, from Hon. Thos. D'Arcy McGee. It is characteristic of Mr. McGee's whole course in reference to Fenianism, and we trust that the spirit of the remarks will be duly attended to by all the citizens of Canada. A few drunken remarks may now and then be heard, but should not be attended to:—

(COPY)

Very naturally you have had, as I hear, a good deal of perturbation in the public mind of Upper Canada.

It was cause enough, to have so many of our fine young men shot down, or maimed for life, by those outlaws of all governments and renegades of all religions, who crossed the Niagara on Friday, the 1st of June, and the Eastern frontier on the 8th.

They are gone, disgraced and degraded, leaders and followers, leaving a couple of hundred prisoners in our hands, which will be dealt with, be assured, according to their deserts.

Our defenders, volunteers and militia, and sailors, have nobly responded to the call of duty. They have done their part; we civilians must do ours. We must more than ever be vigilant and resolute to keep down internal dissensions among ourselves.

We must afford no plausible pretext for dissatisfaction or distrust to any portion of our fellow-subjects.

And I am confident no loyal man—no good neighbor—no good christian—will seek out of the embers of this late blaze, to kindle permanent ill-will among our resident population—The man who would now disseminate suspicion and hatred among fellow-subjects would be worse than a fenian.

Our unanimity saved us this time, and we may live to need unanimity again. I need not say to you that I would give no quarter to the known domestic traitor who would bring war and ruin upon his adopted country. But to asperse a whole class—our class for example, or the French Canadians—as disloyal, is a crime against Canada of the deepest dye.

I speak only what I know and have seen, that the French and Irish Catholics here, and in Montreal, with a very, very odd exception, acted splendidly under the late emergency, and deserve all honor and approbation from their fellow subjects generally, for their public-spiritedness and patriotic conduct.

Terrible News from Mexico.

FIVE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-EIGHT PERSONS SLAUGHTERED BY THE LIBERALS.

San Francisco, May 24.—The Mexican Imperial Consul has received special despatches from Magatlan, May 16th, stating that the Liberals attacked the garrison of Hermosillo on the 24th inst., and after a bloody struggle captured and pillaged the town. Imperial forces subsequently arrived and after killing 200 of the liberals, drove out the rest and recaptured nearly all their booty. Mr. Ainza, an American citizen, and Don D. Gonzales, who refused to give $40 000 to the Liberal cause, were cruelly murdered, together with thirteen Americans.

The Imperials defeated Corona at Singelos, driving him 25 miles and killing 180 men and capturing a large amount of ammunition.

Several wealthy families arrived here on the steamer Continental, who fled from the Liberal rule.

Published accounts say that at the sack of Hermosillo the Liberals murdered 38 foreigners and 500 citizens, who helped to defend the town.

A strong division of Imperialists started from Magatlan on the 16th inst., in pursuit of Corona.

San Francisco, May 26.—A letter from Hermosillo corroborates the account of the atrocities which the Liberals committed at that place, and states and stores were ransacked, rich inhabitants laid under contributions; all who could not pay were murdered, and all the women violated.

Arrival of the "City of Paris."

THE CONGRESS ABANDONED.

WAR IMMINENT!

New York June 16.—the steamer City of Paris, which left Liverpool at 3 p. m. on the 6th and Queenstown on the 7th, arrived here this morning.

PROPOSED CONGRESS ABANDONED.

It is fully confirmed that the proposed Conference has been abandoned owing to the demands of Austria, which were regarded by England, France and Prussia as tantamount to a refusal. All negotiations are broken off by the neutrals, and it remains for the armed powers to negotiate among themselves or commence war. Hopes of peace have almost vanished. The London Times says:—Daily, almost hourly, the chances of peace fade away. It believes that the first events will occur in the Elbe Duchies, but that the great move of Austria will be to attempt to possess herself of Silesia. The Daily News says:—Appearances indicate that a declaration of war or a manifesto equivalent to it, proceed from Prussia Government had issued a circular note to neutral powers, charging Austria with a flagrant breach of treaties, by referring the Holstein question to the diet. Prussia also sent a protest to Austria, declaring that the measures announced by Austria, in the Diet violate the treaty of Gastein, and restores two powers to positions not accorded by the treaty of Gastein, and causes suspense in the Duchies, and restores two powers to positions not accorded by the treaty of Vienna. An Austrian circular that Austria will observe the Gastein convention until a definite settlement of the question of the Duchies is effected. Her only object in referring the matter to the Diet, was to effect such a settlement. Military preparations are reported from all quarters.

SPAIN.

Spain increases her army to 85,000.

THE EUROPEAN CRISIS.

An imperial decree suspends the loans for the protection of personal liberty in Venetia and other Southern parts of the empire.—Authority to do likewise, and establish military Courts, is given to the general commanding the army of the North.

The Austrian army is now 800,000 strong, of whom 600,000 will comprise the army of operations—350,000 against Prussia and 250,000 against Italy.

The Prussian army consists of 452 battalions of infantry, 321 squadrons of cavalry, 1,086 field pieces, &c. It is the largest Prussian army ever set afloat.

The Italian volunteers number 95,000.—The typhus fever is said to have broken out in the Italian army, and the frontier troops were being forwarded daily, and the headquarters were swarming with troops.

The Emperor of Austria was expected at Prague.

Should war break out, Berlin advices state that Bismarck would, accompany the King, as soon as he proceeds to headquarters.—The royal body guard left Potsdam on the 5th.

The Italian Government is said to be engaging London steamers to carry troops.

The Austrian commander has convoked the Estates of Holstein for the 11th June, by order of the Emperor.

The Saxon Chamber of Deputies and voted the credits required by Government and approved the projected armaments.

The Times says the critical relations on the continent have saved the British Ministry.

The True Way to deal with Resident Fenian Sympathisers.

A meeting was held in Montreal a few days ago to organise a Home Guard for the defence of the city. The Hon. Mr. McGee happened to be there at the time and thus addressed the chairman:—

I came to town from the seat of government on a melancholy errand—to attend the funeral of a noble-hearted Englishman, my dear old friend Mr. Atcheson, who was well known to many among you. But there is a duty to the living as well as to the dead, and I feel less sad I have been detained a few hours longer than I absolutely required, since that delay has enabled me to be present at this glorious exhibition of the unanimity, patriotism, pluck and loyalty of Montreal. Mr. Mayor, you have stated the actual situation of the city, and I venture to answer you, as representing nearly one-half of it, that the citizens of Montreal are quite capable of taking care of Montreal. They want arms and they want organization, and I pledge myself, so far as one member of the government can, that they shall have all they want, so far as depends on the government. We may have—I believe we have—in our 120,000 people some turbulent characters who want watching. We have skedaddlers who fled from the American draft three years ago—men who would not fight for their former country, and who now require the city that has been to them, however little they deserve it, a city of refuge, by plotting or plotting against her peace. We have had lately an influx of New York blacklegs and burglars, who have all the instincts and all the necessities of birds of prey, who fancy they already scent the spoils, and who also need to be well watched; [illegible] is a good [illegible] Montreal; it would be well worth plundering. One days sack and pillage would destroy more property between the Tanneries and the Mile End, than any outlay you make, in time and money, to prevent such a calamity.—Us, then, with the good work of the city guard! I separate forever the loyal men from the disaffected and the vicious—he what from the chaff. Take and keep an accurate record of every man who refuses to defend the city, and when this thing is all over—as over it will be in a week, or a fortnight at farthest—as God is over all, we will weed the scoundrels out of our city. (Cheers, and cries of "that's the talk.") Let no man employ them; let no man know them; let the anathema of society banish them forever from the communion of the people they dared to betray; let them go and remain where their sympathies are—among the land pirates, smitten by the anathema of religion and outlawed by the law of nations; the men without a creed, without a country, for whom they will be fit associates. They are out of place here; their congenial sphere is elsewhere, and out of this they will assuredly have to go. I see it reported in the papers—though just at present I would not advise you to swear by all you see in the papers (laughter)—that the invaders are officered in part by ex-officers of the late Southern Confederacy I cannot believe that this is the fact, unless those men hope to embroil England and the States by invading Canada. The Southern people have been conspicuous for their strong social attachments; and I appeal to those who have lived in Canada, in their midst as well as their officers should turn their swords against our people? (Hear, hear.) I put this question to General Breckenridge, now at Toronto and I put it to his companions who have had even longer experience of Canadian respect for the rights of refugee. Mr Chairman, let me add a word on the mercenary matter of money. I have taken the liberty, at the suggestion of the gallant General commanding the District, whom, next to our popular Commander-in-Chief, we all love and trust—I have taken the liberty to suggest to my colleagues at Ottawa, that funds should be immediately placed at the credit of the local paymasters of volunteers. I may further remark that last March $30,000 were subscribed in this city in aid of the families of the brave men at the front. I think every penny of that money ought to be paid in, and, if I may take the liberty of saying so, I think the Committee of management, while careful to guard against imposition, ought not to be niggardly or penurious. This, gentlemen, I think, is all I have got to say at present. (Cheers.)

REMOVAL OF THE FENIAN PRISONERS.—In accordance with instructions received from Ottawa, the Fenian prisoners in the Montreal gaol, fifteen in number, were conveyed to Phillipsburg, in the district of Bedford.—They were taken to the station in carriages, handcuffed in pairs, and guarded by soldiers and armed policemen. The order for their removal was not made public, and when the prisoners and their escort passed through the streets they attracted but little attention.

About 500 Mormons, on their way to Salt Lake City, passed through Toronto on Saturday morning. They formed part of a company of about 1500 emigrants, destined for the Western States. Many of the Mormons were English, and were accompanied by several of the "Saints," who acted as their guides to the promised land, the inheritance of Brigham Young.

AMONG THE FENIANS.

A French Canadian reporter of La Minerve gives an account of his experience among the Fenians.

He started on Friday morning from Dorvierres station on horseback, and met a great many farmers and their families in their flight, each the most terrifying accounts of the savage doings of the Fenians. But he continued his way, taking to the woods in order to escape notice. Finally, he caught sight of Pigeon Hill, and its gorgeous green flag which floated over one of the largest houses. A member of the Fenians could be seen in the fields chasing cattle in every direction. But as the reporter ventured from the cover of the woods, he was seen, and the alarm raised by the cry, repeated on all sides, "British soldiers!" Immediately the bugle sounded and the plunderers made a rush towards headquarters. Then the reporter prudently turned back, but was soon confronted by a party of un Fenians, headed with bundles of green bark of elm trees, intended, probably, to be used instead of ropes for tying either prisoners or plunderers. They then politely and with many witty remarks relieved him of his horse, his papers, and his purse, after which they exchanged with him clothes, and even boots, so that when they brought him to headquarters he was dressed like a ragged and dirty Fenian.

When entering the village the captive saw whole sheep and oxen roasting as in the days of Homer, dirty cooks performing their task in a nasty and revolting manner. One of them was parading the bowels of an animal as food with which they would feed Lord Monck and Thomas D'Arcy McGee when they held them prisoner.

There was no discipline among them, and they were incessantly quarrelling with each other about trifles, resorting however to no other weapons but their most coarse and vagabond tongues, which never stopped. They freely stated that they had no intention of meeting the British soldiers in fight; they meant to retreat before them; that their object was to pillage, destroy, keep the people in a state of alarm, and worry out the military forces. If driven on one point, they will withdraw across the lines, and surrender if need be, to the United States authorities; but they will reorganize and keep this game of brigandage going on all summer, until the Canadians cannot stand it any longer. Several of them had resided in Canada, and showed some acquaintance with places and leading residents. They say that if prisoners are put to death they will certainly be revenged by incendiarism and assassination. They seem to have spies all over Canada, and to be well informed as to the movements of our troops. In the evening a courier reached them from St. Johns, giving them every information about the movements of the troops about to concentrate upon them, with the number and character of the several corps put in motion.

On Tuesday evening, at five o'clock, they had a courier from St. Armand, with the report, which proved afterwards correct, that a locomotive had come to the station with British spies, and gone back, very narrowly escaping capture.

A Captain Trestian came to question the reporter about the country, the roads, and the preparations in progress. As the Fenian leader could obtain only evasive answers, he suddenly changed his policy, ordered that all his clothes should be restituted to the reporter, and even his purse, which, however, was returned empty.—Then he tried to convince the prisoners that French Canadians should favor the Fenians, and make common cause with them, and that Sweeney was in correspondence with some in Montreal, but he could not or would not give any name.

HEALTH IS STRENGTH.—To prevent or conquer disease is one of the grandest attainments ever aimed at by man; and Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers will as sure cure coughs, colds, tickling in the throat and pulmonary complaints, as war and pestilence will destroy. Severe colds if not attended to sooner or later lead to incurable consumption, and the strength of the strongest soon falls if neglected. The readiest and best makes known for the cure of these complaints is "Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers," which have been throughly tried for the last twenty years, and have never been known to fail.—Singers and public speakers will also derive great benefit from the use of them. Sold by all medicine dealers, at 25cts. per box.

If a person faints place him flat on the floor, or bed on his back, and let him lay quietly for ten minutes or so, it is simply a fainting fit, and the blood flowing to a level will speedily equalize itself through the system. If you are troubled with rheumatism, pleurisy, pain in the side or back, cramps in the stomach, burns, frost-bites, &c., procure at once a bottle of the "Canada Pain Destroyer," which is a certain cure for all such complaints. Sold by all Medicine Dealers.

Silver plated ice pitchers & molasses cups	25.00 40.00

See what the most popular and widely circulated periodicals say of our Establishment:

From the "Dispatch" of February 25, 1865.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the announcement of Messrs. Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, Silver Ware, and Fancy Goods, in our advertising columns. We are personally acquainted with the members of this firm and know them to be gentlemen of sterling worth and integrity. Their stock of goods, for variety and extent, we have scarcely seen paralleled.

From the "Mirror of Fashion," March 1, 1865.

Messrs. Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, etc, opened on the 15th ult., and we venture to say that no finer display of goods was ever exhibited by any establishment in this city. The ladies thronged their bazaar almost to suffocation, although the streets were rendered nearly impassable by the melted snow and slush. We predict for them a wonderful success.

From the "Ledger," February 28, 1865.

Our lady friends should visit the extensive establishment of Messrs. Devaugh & Co, No. 15 Maiden Lane, if they wish to indulge themselves with a sight which they will long remember. Such a profusion of elegant Watches, Chains, Rings, Earrings, and, in short, of Jewelry of every name, kind and description, we never before witnessed. Their silver and plated ware is superb and almost casts into the shade the other splendid establishments which have long been the boast of our city. It is estimated that their stock is worth not less than one million of dollars.

How You Can Get a Prize.

Send Twenty-Five Cents to us, and as soon as we receive it we will mail you a Certificate showing what you are entitled to. If the article or articles please you, send back the Certificate and One Dollar and we will forward you the article, no matter how costly it may be. If the article is not what you wish, state, when you send the Certificate and dollar, what other article of the same value you prefer and we will send it. If you wish more than one Certificate send us $1 and we will send five; for $2, eleven; for $5, thirty; for $10, sixty; for $15, one hundred.

Agents are wanted in the Army and in every place. We have an immense stock of goods to dispose of, and need a large number of Agents. Our terms to Agents are very liberal and some even of our Lady Agents are making from $5 to $20 a day. We give Agents 50 per cent. on all Certificates they sell provided they remit not less than $1 for eight.

GREAT IMPROVEMENT IN

SEWING MACHINES.

EMPIRE SHUTTLE MACHINE!

PATENTED FEB. 14th, 1860.

Salesrooms, { 536 Broadway, New York, / 252 Washington St., Boston.

THIS MACHINE is constructed on entirely new principles of mechanism, possessing many rare and valuable improvements, having been examined by the most profound experts, and pronounced to be

Simplicity and Perfection Combined.

It has a straight needle, perpendicular action, makes the lock or shuttle stitch, which will neither rip nor ravel, and is alike on both sides; performs perfect sewing on every description of material, from leather to the finest Nansook Muslin, with cotton, linen or silk thread, from the coarsest to the finest number. Having neither CAM nor COGWHEEL, and the least possible friction, it runs as smooth as glass and is

Emphatically a Noiseless Machine.

It requires FIFTY PER CENT less power to drive it than any other Machine in the market. A girl twelve years of age can work it steadily, without fatigue or injury to health.

Its strength and Wonderful Simplicity of construction renders it almost impossible to get out of order, and is GUARANTEED by the Company to give entire satisfaction.

We respectfully invite all those who may desire to supply themselves with a superior article, to come and examine the Unrivalled Machine.

But in a more especial manner do we elicit the patronage of

Merchant Tailors,	Corset Makers,
Coach Makers,	Gaiter Fitters,
Hoop Skirt Manufacturers,	Shoe Binders,
Skirt and Bosom Makers.	Vest and Pantaloon Makers,
	Dress Makers.

Religious and Charitable Institution will be liberally dealt with.

One half-hour's instruction is sufficient to enable any person to work the Machine to their entire satisfaction.

Agents wanted for all Towns in the United States, where agents are not already established. Also for Cuba, Mexico, Central and South America, to whom a liberal discount will be given.

Terms invariably Cash on delivery.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any Cologne, used to bathe the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headache, &c. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and has obtained a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by Dunbar Barnes & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

"Jes' so P——." Exactly P——Solon Shingle said; they were there "every time." If he felt "owley" in the morning, he took Plantation Bitters; if he felt weary at night, he took Plantation Bitters; if he lacked appetite, was weak, languid or mentally oppressed, he took Plantation Bitters; and they never failed to set him on his pins square and firm.

Few persons want any better authority; but as some may, just read the following:

" " " I owe much to you, for I verily believe the Plantation Bitters have saved my life.

REV. W. H. WAGONER, Madrid, N. Y."

" " " I have been a great sufferer from Dyspepsia, and had to abandon preaching. " " The Plantation Bitters have cured me

REV. C. A. MILLWOOD, New York City.

" " " I had lost all appetite—was so weak and enervated I could hardly walk, and had a perfect dread of society. " " " The Plantation Bitters have set me all right.

JAMES HEIMINWAY, St. Louis, Mo."

" " " The Plantation Bitters have cured me of a derangement of the Kidneys and Urinary Organs, that distressed me for years. They act like a charm.

C. C. MOORE, 254 Broadway, N. Y."

Mrs. O. M. DEVOE, manager of the Union Home School for Soldiers' Children, says she "has given it to the weak and invalid children under her charge, with the most happy and gratifying results." We have received over a hundred reams of such certificates, but no advertisement is so effective as what people themselves say of a good article. Our fortune and our reputation is at stake. The original quality and high character of these goods will be sustained under every and all circumstances. They have already obtained a sale in every town, village, parish and hamlet among civilized nations. Base imitators try to come as near our name and style as they can, and because a good article cannot be sold as low as a poor one, they find some au port from parties who do not care what they sell. Be on your guard. See our private stamp over the cork.

Gentleman:—"I had a negro man worth $1,200 who took cold from a bad hurt in the leg, and was useless for over a year. I had used everything I could hear of without benefit, until I tried the Mexican Mustang Liniment.—It soon effected a permanent cure."

J. L. DOWNING.

Montgomery, Ala., June 17, 1865.

"I take pleasure in recommending the Mexican Mustang Liniment as a valuable and indispensable article for Sprains, Sores, Scratches or Galls on Horses. Our men all say it acts like magic."

J. W. BEWITT,
Foreman for America, Wells, Fargo's and Harnden's Express.

"The Sprain of my daughters ankle, occasioned while skating last winter, was entirely cured in one week, after she commenced using your celebrated Mustang Liniment.

ED. BEELY."

Gloucester, Mass., Aug 1, 1865.

It is an admitted fact that the Mexican Mustang Liniment performs more cures in shorter time, on man and beats, than any article ever discovered. Families, livery-men and planters should always have it on hand. Quick and sure it certainly is. All genuine is wrapped in steel-plate engravings, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook Chemist, and the private U. S. stamp of Demas Barnes & Co. over the top.

An effort has been made to counterfeit it with a cheap stone plate label. Look closely!

It is a most delightful Hair Dressing.
It eradicates scurf and dandruff.
It keeps the hair rich, soft and glossy.
It prevents hair turning gray and falling off.
It restores hair upon prematurely bald heads.
This is just what Lyon's Kathairon will do.
It is pretty—it is cheap—durable. It is literally sold by the car-load, and yet its almost increasing, until there is hardly a country store that does not keep it, or a family that does not use it.

Who would not be beautiful? Who would not add to their beauty? What gives that marble purity and distingue appearance we observe upon the stage, and in the city belle? It is no longer a secret. They use Hagan's Magnolia Balm. Its continued use removes tan, freckles, pimples and roughness, from the face and hands, and leaves the complexion smooth, transparent, blooming and ravishing. Unlike many cosmetics, it contains no material injurious to the skin. Any Druggists will order it for you, if not on hand, at 50 cts per bottle.

Helmstreet's inimitable Hair Coloring is not a dye. All instantaneous dyes are composed of lunar caustic, and more or less destroy the vitality and beauty of the hair. This is the original hair Coloring, and has been growing in favor over twenty years. It restores gray hair to its original color by gradual absorption, in a most remarkable manner. It is also a beautiful hair dressing. Sold in two sizes—50 cents and $1—by all dealers.

PIANO-FORTES.

BEIGOS' NEW PATENT.

ARE THE ONLY INSTRUMENTS constructed on a truly scientific principle. They have great strength, and will remain longer in tune than any other Piano. The construction is simple and natural, all the extraneous lumber in the body of the instrument is dispensed with; the sound boards are merely two arched planks of thin wood, like the front and back of a violin; the strings are attached to a strong iron frame, which is separate and entirely independent of the same, thereby dispensing with the old harp form of stringing by substituting straight bridges, preserving at the same time The Over Strung Bass, of which Mr Dunnes is the inventor. By these improvements we gain much more vibratory power, at the same time preserving all its purity and richness of tone.

They have received the highest testimonials from the Press, and all the principal artists in the country, among which are:

Harry Sanderson,	L. M. Gottschalk,
Max Maretzek,	S. Thalberg,
Theodore Eisfeld,	Wm Mason,
Herman Wollenhaupt,	A Barili
Francis H. Brown,	M. Strackosch,
Wm. Henry Fry.	Charles Fradel

MR. SIGISMUND THALBERG, the great pianist, says:—I have examined your new Piano-fortes and I cordially approve of its system of construction. Its principle, by which great increase of vibratory power is obtained, being very simple and perfectly philosophical. The tone is grand and noble; it has great capacity for sustaining the sound or singing, and its volume of tone or power I have never heard excelled in depth, purity and sympathetic sweetness.

Wm HENRY FRY, late musical critic of the N. Y. Tribune says:—I have examined your newly invented Piano-Fortes. They merit all the praise given to them by Messrs. Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strackosch, Mason and others. As regards the structure, they are original and philosophical; in purity, volume, and continuity of tone; in vocal verisimilitude, that crowning excellence which enables the pianists to "sing" on the instrument. Your anvil deserve the highest rank. Your invention, in my opinion, is destined to work radical changes in the manufacture of Pianos throughout the world.

From the N. Y. Herald, Sept. 8.—Upon a careful examination of Beigos Piano-Forte, we find the results obtained are a very fine singing tone, great purity and brilliancy throughout the entire instrument, not often found in Pianos constructed upon the old plan.

The N. Y. Times, July 12, says:—We have now an instrument without an equal. It can sing with a smoothe delicacy, perfectly unsustained under every and all circumstances. They have already obtained a sale in every town, village, parish and hamlet among civilized nations. Base imitators try to come as near our name and style as they can, and because a good article cannot be sold as low as a poor one, they find some au port from parties who do not care what they sell. Be on your guard. See our private stamp over the cork.

FINKLE & LYON

SEWING MACHINE CO.

OFFICE 581 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

GUARANTEE—After a fair trial, if any purchaser does not regard the Finkle & Lyon Sewing Machine as superior to any machine in market, he can return it and have his money. It has taken many of the highest prizes—is less complicated than any other first class machine,—does a wider range of work without changing,—requires no taking apart to clean or oil, and no "lessons" to set needle, regulate tension, or operate machine.

N B Any Clergyman sending us two orders for Machines, shall receive one for himself as a present. The same proposition is extended to Professors and Teachers.

We have now completed our New Manufactory at a cost of some $200,000, including New Patents and important Improvements; and the object of the above proposition is to secure the immediate introduction of our improved machine into every town in the United States without incurring the great expense of a travelling agent.

This proposition cannot avail in towns occupied by our own agents

Please send for descriptive Catalogue, with samples of sewing.

BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY

IN CANADA.

The following testimony from a well known and highly respected Merchant of Prescott, a coadjutor of the general approval given to Dr WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY:

PRESCOTT, C. W., Dec. 8th, 1859.

Messrs. S. W. Fowle & Co., Boston.

Gentlemen:—

Being solicited by your Travelling Agent for an expression of opinion of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. I with pleasure assert that it is, in my belief, the best remedy before the public for coughs and pulmonary complaints.

Having tested the article with myself and family, in case of severe coughs and colds, for years, with uniform and unexceptionable success, I unhesitatingly recommend it with full confidence in its merits.

Yours truly,

ALFRED HOOKER.

A Year After Marriage.

BY T. S ARTHUR.

The stranger followed Mrs. Leonard confidently. The apartment into which they entered was small, containing a bed and a few other articles of chamber furniture, all as neat and clean as hands could make them.

'This is your room,' the kind-hearted Mrs Leonard said as she placed the candle upon the toilet stand, that was covered with cloth of snowy whiteness.

'It is a sweet place,' murmured the poor creature, looking around with an innocent smile. 'I shall be safe here.' And a slight shudder passed through her frame.

'O, yes perfectly safe. But come, let me help to undress you. I know your head longs to rest upon that pillow.'

Without hesitation, the stranger submitted herself to the hands of Mrs Leonard, who had not proceeded far in loosening and removing her soiled, and, in many places, rent garments, before something in her appearance struck her eye, which caused her heart to shrink from her with an instinctive feeling of repulsion. One glance, however, into the young, guileless face of the being by her side—one thought of the sad truth that reason had become partially dethroned, caused this feeling instantly to subside, while another emotion, full of woman's deepest and tenderest sympathies, took its place in her gentle bosom.

After the poor wanderer's body and mind had lain down, Mrs. Leonard bent over her for a little while, with her hand lingering on her forehead, as she smoothed back the hair, damp and dishevelled, that lay around it in thick masses.

'As you are going to stay with me always,' she said with an encouraging smile meant to gain still further the young stranger's confidence, 'you must tell me your name.'

'Call me Grace. I have always loved the sweet name of Grace,' was the reply to this, made after a pause, in which there was an evident effort to think and decide how best to answer the question.

'A sweet sleep, and pleasant dreams to you, Grace,' Mrs. Leonard said, kissing her. 'And so good night.'

Making up the light, she softly withdrew. As she re-entered the room from which she had passed in conducting Grace to her chamber, a broad vivid flash came reflected through the open door of the cottage, making the candle dim in her hand, and seeming to flicker around every article of furniture in the department. A momentary, breathless pause ensued, and then the earth was jarred by a heavy rattling peal of thunder.

A sudden feeling of alarm for her husband had not become fully formed before the well-known sound of his approaching foot-steps caught her ear. He came in with a look of pain and disappointment upon his face.

'It has been all to no purpose, Anna,' he said. 'We have searched the woods for miles, and cannot find the poor creature, and now a dreadful—'

The raised fingers of Mrs. Leonard, and the look enjoining silence, caused him to pause.

'Hush! She is here safe in bed!' she then whispered; 'do not make a noise, or she may become frightened. There! she is out of bed, as I live! The sound of your voice has startled her.'

Lifting the candle again, she quickly entered the apartment where she had left her charge. The poor creature was standing in the middle of the floor, her eyes staring wildly and her whole manner expressive of alarm.

'Do not let them take me away! Oh, do not let them take me away!' she said, in a hoarse whisper, catching tightly hold of Mrs. Leonard's arm. 'I want to stay with you always.'

'No one is here to take you away. No one shall take you away,' urged Mrs. Leonard, in a soothing voice.

'But I heard them just now. I heard a man in that room, and men are cruel.'

'It was only my husband, and he is not cruel. He is a good man. He will not take you away, nor let any one trouble you.'

'Your husband!' ejaculated Grace, with a changed tone and expression, still serious, but with less of fear. 'And so you have got a husband? And isn't he harsh and overbearing? Doesn't he hold the rein tight! Doesn't he make you know your place and keep it? Poor thing! I am sorry for you.'

'O, no,' replied Mrs. Leonard, smiling in spite of herself. 'My husband doesn't do any of those things. He's a good man, and loves me too well to be harsh and overbearing.'

'And will he let me stay here?'

'Certainly he will. So come, get into your bed again, and go to sleep.'

Taking Grace by the arm, Mrs. Leonard then led her, unresisting, to the bed, and once more kissing her tenderly, bade her again good night. Retiring from the room, she rejoined her husband, and in a few whisper detailed all that had passed in regard to the stranger. Both then, after first kneeling a few moments in prayer to that Being whom they never forgot under any circumstances, retired to their chamber, where they were soon locked in sound and refreshing slumber, unheeding the storm that raged wildly without for a few hours, and then passed away.

CHAPTER XI.

It was broad day light when Mrs Leonard arose and stole softly into the room where she had left Grace on the night before. She found her still sleeping. The sunbeams had already penetrated the chamber, and striking against the pure white-washed wall, came back, mellowed in reflection, and lit up the face of the slumbering female, giving to each line of her delicate features a clear and distinct expression.

'So young—so beautiful, and yet so wretched!' was the mental ejaculation of Mrs. Leonard, as she bent over the sleeping stranger in silent admiration of her lovely face, that now so placid and so innocent, seemed as if a shadow of pain, or guilt, or sorrow, had never crossed it.

'Poor sufferer! How sadly hast thou been wronged!' she murmured inwardly, dashing aside a tear as it stole out upon her cheek.

At that moment the slumberer awoke, and starting up, looked wildly around. Then, pressing her hand upon her forehead, she seemed striving to recall the past, and to connect it with the present. But she evidently failed in the effort, for she said, looking into Mrs. Leonard's face with a bewildered air—

'Can you tell me where I am, and why I am here?'

'I can only tell you that you came to us last night seeking a shelter,' Mrs. Leonard replied, somewhat embarrassed in manner, for she perceived that the stranger's mind no longer wandered.

There was another long and thoughtful pause, during which her recollections of the past seemed to grow more distinct, for it ended in her covering her face with her hands, sinking back upon the pillow, and giving way to a violent fit of weeping.

Until this had measurably subsided, Mrs. Leonard stood by in silence. But as soon as she became somewhat calmer, she bent down over her, and taking her small white hand in hers, said tenderly,

'My dear young friend, though to me you are all unknown—your name, your character, your condition—yet something about you has touched my heart with a feeling of strong interest. Confide in me as in an elder sister, and while you remain under the quiet roof that now covers you, let your heart, over-wearied and heavy laden, find rest.'

'Weary and heavy laden, it does!' was the low and mournful reply. 'But rest—rest! Shall I find rest and peace? Shall my fluttering heart ever again more calmly? But I must not think of the past—it makes my brain whirl, and my senses seem about to leave me.

'Do not, then, think of the past, but of the present,' urged Mrs. Leonard. 'You told me last night to call you Grace. Is that your name?'

'Call me Grace. I wish to be known by no other name,' the stranger said.—'And that brings us at once to the present. I am, as you see, a wanderer away from my home—once a pleasant, happy home, but of late rendered insupportable. I cannot—I will not return to it. No force shall keep me there, and no persuasion induce me to remain, if taken back against my will.'

The whole expression of her face changed as she uttered this in a sensibly excited tone, while her eyes became wild and restless.

'Don't think of that! Don't talk of that' Mrs. Leonard said, quickly, for she feared, from her excitement, that her mind would again wander, if allowed to rest upon so agitating a subject. 'You have already dwelt too long upon it. Here you can enjoy quiet and seclusion, until ready for a change that is desirable to yourself.'

Soothed by these and other words of kindness, Grace—for so we must call her, until a better name is found—arose from the bed, and though feeble as from a recent illness, dressed herself in garments provided by Mrs. Leonard. Her own were soiled and torn. While that lady was assisting her to dress, Grace put her lips close to her ear and said something in a low tone, while her face became deeply flushed.

'Heaven be praised for that!' was the quick and pleased response of Mrs. Leonard. 'When the heart is innocent peace cannot long be a wanderer.'

After assisting Grace to dress, Mrs. Leonard left her alone in her chamber.—Other duties called her away. Two babes were to be attended to, and then she had the frugal meal to prepare, as the temporary absence of their single domestic, a neighboring farmer's daughter, left the entire burden of household duties upon her hands. It was more than an hour after she had left her alone that she re-entered the chamber of Grace. She found her seated by a table, her head resting upon her hand, and her countenance expressive of profound melancholy.

'Come, Grace,' she said, in a cheerful tone, holding out her hand, 'it is now breakfast time, and I must present you to my husband.'

'O, no, no, no! I cannot see any one but yourself! Indeed I cannot!' was the quick emphatic reply.

'Grace, my young friend,' Mrs. Leonard said, gravely, yet kindly. 'My husband and myself are one. He is already as well acquainted with you as I am, and takes in you a like interest. You must therefore meet him. The more especially as he is the minister of this parish, and must be able, as he is willing, to speak to you some words of comfort, and to advise with and direct you.'

There was an air of decision both in the tone and manner of Mrs. Leonard, that her guest felt that she could not resist. Much as she shrank from the thought of meeting her husband, or indeed any stranger, she yet, after hesitating for a few moments, slowly arose from her chair and followed Mrs. Leonard with steps of painful reluctance.

A young man of moderate stature, with a mild, benevolent countenance, was standing in the middle of the breakfast room as they entered. To him Mrs Leonard presented Grace, and he received her with a frank, cheerful air, bidding her welcome to the hospitalities their little cottage afforded. His appearance, voice, and manner at once gained her confidence, and although she uttered no word, her heart thanked him.

All now became seated, while the young minister read a portion of the holy Word, and then returned thanks for the blessings of sleep, for protection during the silent watches of the night, and for the many mercies daily and hourly dispensed unto them. Nor did he forget the wandering stranger who had been guided to their humble roof but prayed that the oil and wine of consolation might be poured out for her—that her heart might be inclined to His testimonies which were peace, and that, wearied and heavy laden, she might come to Him and find rest.

Like oil upon the troubled waters, was this unexpected scene of devotion to the heart of Grace. It softened, subdued, and humanized (if the expression may be allowed here) her feelings.

But little was said during breakfast, and after the meal was over, she retired to her chamber where Mrs. Leonard found her, on entering about an hour after, weeping silently, drying her tears, and endeavoring to smile. Grace said—

'Forgive this weakness. I will endeavor, while I burden you with my presence, if I may dare to hope that I will be allowed to hide myself here for a brief season, to be cheerful, at least as far as it is possible. Just now, my nerves seem shattered, and my cast of over myself to be almost gone. I seem to have awakened from a slumber, will dream—and something that I hardly dare inquire about—tells me that it has not all been a dream. Forgive, then, the pain I have already caused you to feel, and bear with me a little while, until I can gain some command over myself. My exile from my friends is self-imposed, and I must, therefore, bear it with patience, if I cannot with cheerfulness.'

'But would it not be better, all things considered, for you to return to your friends? Your absence from them seems, really, more than you can bear with safety to yourself. And to them it must be agonizing.'

'No—no—no! I cannot, I will not return!' was the quick, half angry response.

'Any condition is more tolerable than the one from which I have escaped. Permit me, therefore, to remain in this quiet secluded spot for a short time at least.—You shall not be burdened any further than the presence of one like me, under the circumstances, must necessarily burden you.'

'As she said this, she drew from her bosom a purse, and taking several gold pieces from it, held them out, saying as she did so—

'But let these bear their due portion of the burden I shall be to your little household.'

From this proffer, Mrs. Leonard shrank sensitively away, and seemed hurt and offended.

'I thought of none but yourself when I made the remark,' she replied. 'To us the rendering of kind offices to a fellow creature in trouble, is far more pleasant than but gain.'

'There is one thing, however, to be considered by us, Grace,' she resumed, after a thoughtful pause, speaking reluctantly.—'And that is, how far we shall be acting right in refraining from any efforts to seek out your friends and give them notice where you are. As we know nothing of the circumstances connected with your departure from home, which has, evidently, been without the knowledge of those who have claims upon you, it does not now seem to either my husband or myself right that we should remain perfectly passive. I speak to you at once, frankly, in regard to the matter.'

The face of the stranger became instantly flushed with the warm blood of a suddenly aroused feeling of indignation. This however, quickly subsided, and she sat, musing, for some time, with her eyes upon the floor.

'It is plain,' she said, after the passage of several minutes, 'that pleased as I have felt at the thought of being permitted to spend a brief period under your peaceful roof, free from oppressions that I could not endure, and persecutions that I will not suffer, I am not to remain here. I do not blame either you or your husband, for I am conscious that, in doing what you propose to yourself, you would be acting from the best light you have, in the conscientious performance of duty. But, as I do not intend that it shall be known where I am, I must at once leave your house and seek some other place of concealment.'

'Do not act so hastily, my dear young friend,' interposed Mrs. Leonard. 'I cannot think of—'

'There is one, and only one condition upon which I will remain under this roof,' Grace said, interrupting her in a firm voice—'and that is, the condition clearly and fully declared, that neither you nor your husband will take steps, or connive at any that may be taken to seek out my friends, or convey information to them, of my presence in this neighborhood, for at least three months to come. And, moreover, that you will promise to use your best efforts to prevent any one else from doing what you pledge yourselves not to do. I have money with me, and can easily get conveyed to another portion of the State, which I will do, if I cannot find that security here for which I seek.'

There was an earnestness, decision, and energy about the young creature's tone and manner, that left no doubt upon the mind of Mrs. Leonard that she would act just as she said. She, therefore, promised her that nothing should be done for the present, and that all she asked should be complied with, at least, until they had given her notice to the contrary—which they would do, if, after mature deliberation, they found that it would be wrong for them to remain silent.

Thus assured, the stranger's strongly awakened anxiety subsided, and with a renewed promise to make be effort to be cheerful, she resumed the chair from which she had risen, saying as she did so, while the tears came to her eyes—

'Bear with a wayward one, whose earliest recollection is blessed by no vision of a mother's love, whose ear, as memory recalls the pleasant voices of childhood, listens in vain for a mother's sweetest tones. With one, who has ever been subjected to, and ever rebelled against arbitrary rules, until submission has become a state than which any other is preferable. Love me, and I will die for you—but oppose—be cold, and harsh, and arbitrary, and I will die rather than submit.'

In closing this sentence, Grace again became excited. But Mrs. Leonard, by gentle words of assurance, quieted her feelings once more, and then, called away by the duties of her family, left her again alone.

CHAPTER XII.

It was nearly two weeks after Harrey Lee's return from his exciting adventure in New Jersey, before he was able to go out of the house. A violent fever had been the result of the sad disappointment following that event, which had raged for some forty-eight hours, throwing his mind into a state of temporary delirium. His daily visitor and kind attendant, during all that time, had been Mrs. Woodman. As he slowly regained his strength, they frequently conversed about Fanny. Indeed she was the whole burden of all his intercourse with any one to whom he could talk with the confidence of a friend.

'Bitterly do I condemn myself for my unbending manner toward her, at times,' he remarked one day. 'I see, now, that I was wrong, although it seemed, then, that to yield to what seemed in her a wish to govern, would have been injurious as well to her as to myself.'

'I do not think she had any wish to govern, Harrey,' Mrs. Woodman replied.

'Indeed, I am sure she had not. But there was a defect in her education that you ought to have known, and which you ought to have met and corrected with judicious forbearance. Had I dreamed that it could have possibly led to the painful consequences that now exist, I should have warned you in time. But I trusted in your good sense and discrimination to read fully her character, and in your genuine love for her, to think more of her happiness than your own dignity of position as a man and a husband.'

'You are severe, and perhaps justly so,' was Lee's answer to this plain remark of his friend. 'Though I think you have, in some degree, misunderstood my motives and my actions. But, first, tell me the nature of that defect in her education of which you have spoken.'

'You know that her mother died when she was but a little child.'

'Yes, so she has told me.'

'And that she was raised entirely by her aunt.'

'Yes.'

'That aunt was not a judicious woman. She was one that arbitrary and passionate; and Fanny, from an infant, could be much more easily led than driven. But the ruling spirit of love prevailed in Mrs Liston's family only at brief seasons, while the ruling spirit of compulsion, in a most repulsive form, was almost always dominant. Against this, Fanny constantly rebelled, and even until the last day of her residence with her aunt, refused to obey a mere dictation unaccompanied by any show of reason, or spirit of affection. Fearful, from the effects of this system of discipline upon her mind, that a husband's true relation to his wife, and a wife's true relation to her husband, might not be fully seen and appreciated by her, I carefully endeavored to insinuate into her mind a just appreciation of both, though with us, it seems, having succeeded in so doing. Still, I hoped more from her affection for you, and your affection for her, than from any mere intellectual form that I could give to the principle I wished to inculcate. It seems, however, that I have been sadly mistaken.'

'Sadly indeed!' was Lee's bitter reply. 'Oh! that I had but known this, and been aided truly in my conduct toward her, so that love, and not a colder and harsher feeling, might have prevailed toward her at times when it seemed to me that she wished to rule.'

'I am sure she never wished to rule you, Harrey,' Mrs. Woodman said, quickly.

'And yet, permit me to say, now that we are on the subject, that there was often the appearance that she did. And that I, considering it obligatory on me, as the man, to lead and govern in matters involving a difference, never did, after the few first months of our marriage, yield to her exactions in any point. In this I may have been wrong, and doubtless was wrong.'

'In the first place,' Mrs. Woodman rejoined to this declaration and confession, 'I can take it upon myself to say, for Fanny, positively and distinctly, that, acknowledged to herself, she never had the wish to bear away in anything. But she was, from the very nature of things, as just explained to you, jealous of her own position and rights, and saw the one invaded and the other transgressed where no such invasion and transgression were intended, or even thought of. In the second place, I am afraid that, like Fanny, you have not fully appreciated husband and wife's true relation to each other.'

'That is indeed, very possible; and probable, too, if the result of a few months' experience is to be taken as corroborating evidence in the case.'

'I am afraid that you have thought more of your wife as distinct from you, as in a position somewhat below you, and bound to obey, more than as one with yourself, whose action should be spontaneous with yours, and whose perceptions should be watched by you as carefully as your judgment, upon rational grounds, should be weighed by her. Am I not right?'

'I am afraid, from the glimpse of the truth in regard to the principle involved in the marriage relation, which your words give me, that you may be right,' Lee said, thoughtfully.

'Are you conscious of having deferred, as I have hinted, to Fanny's preferences and opinions, at any time, upon the ground, just hinted, of her being equal with yourself, and endowed with quicker perceptions to balance your sounder judgment?'

'I cannot say that I have, Mrs. Woodman. At first I deferred, because I did not wish to oppose one I loved, not even attempting to reason gently against a course I disapproved, but failing in which her humor in a quiet way. In doing so, however, I could not help thinking her very thoughtless and inconsiderate of my wishes and opinions, and this gradually aroused in my mind a spirit of opposition, that, when it showed itself, appeared to her, I can readily imagine, as mere opposition, for in making it, I did not feel kindly. This opposition was made part from a feeling and part from principle. It seemed to me, the more I thought about the matter, the more incumbent upon me to assume my true place as husband, and let her see that I must be master in my own house. The result has been beyond my most distant conception disastrous.'

'I see clearly, your mistake,' Mrs. Woodman replied to this confession. 'If, from the first, you had sought to act in concert with her, and had led her, gently and affectionately, to act in concert with you, so that your minds might, in all questions and decisions, act as one mind, you would quickly have found that Fanny had no wish to rule. Her sole at inclination to have her own way in trifles, would have soon subsided in the delight she experienced in acting in concert with one she loved.'

'Although I have heard you converse on this subject, or on subjects connected with it, before, I cannot yet clearly see how two minds can act as one, unless there be some kind of subordination of one to the other.'

'Of course, where there is subordination, there must be a degree of pawerfulness. A giving up of individual freedom and independence, so far as that subordination is concerned.'

'Of course.'

'Then a subordination of the wife to the husband must be the putting her in an inferior place.'

'So it would seem.'

'How, then, can any principle of equality exist, where there is a predication of the superior and inferior.'

'But are husband and wife really equal? Is not that much-talked-of equality a cant of the day?'

'There may be cant in it with those who do not really understand the relation of husband and wife,' Mrs. Woodman said, 'and they, alas! make too large a portion of the men and women who compose society. And yet the re is an equality, with a difference that ought to be more understood.—The difference is this. Man reasons more than woman, and woman perceives quicker than man. While he by a regular process of ratiocination arrives at conclusions, she trusts more to the faculty of perception.—Separate them, and leave them to act independently of each other, and he has no corrector of his false deductions, and she no tablet on which she can look for confirmation or rejection of her own instinctive conclusions. Upon their union, then, results the perfection of the man, generally speaking. One is not, therefore, and cannot be independent of the other, and in their union there is no equality, with a difference of relation to each other. De-troy that equality, and his corrector or confirmer is imperfect, and her referring tablet covered with characters that she cannot read. The rational conclusions of the husband should always be questioned, if after picturing to the mind of his wife the reasons that influence him, she cannot perceive them to be true—and her perceptions should not be made rules of action, if not confirmed by his mode of determining a doubtful question. Thus, my young friend, you can see how each is equal in authority, but upon different grounds. Still, in most cases, the husband's reason will be deferred to by the wife, because important actions will be more easily determined by him, from the more expansive nature of his information and intercourse with society in the business of life.'

'I can see both beauty and truth in what you say, Mrs. Woodman. And yet, how little of that mutual dependence do we see around us.'

'It is possible Harrey, that you may judge others in this from your own state.—I have mingled much in society, and am pleased to affirm, that I know very many in the married state, who thus mutually depend upon and confide in each other. Fearly all learn to do so in a degree, sooner or later in life; though in some the deference of one to the other is small; and in others an open opposition is maintained to the end of this natural life.'

At this stage of the conversation, which had awakened a new train of thoughts and feelings in the breast of Lee, some one pulled the front door bell with a strong hand, and the two paused until the servant answered the summons.

THE BRITISH UNION JACK.—The Union Jack, that "Meteor Flag of England," is now a combination of the crosses of SS. George, Andrew, and Patrick, which combined represent the three kingdoms united under the sway of the crown of England. The original Union Jack was formed of the crosses of SS. George and Andrew, and declared to be the national ensign by James I, on the union of the kingdoms of England and Scotland. But at the beginning of the present century, 1801, when Ireland was united to the kingdom of Great Britain, it became necessary to add the Cross of St. Patrick. The present Jack is blazoned as follows:

On a field azure, the cross saltire of St. Andrew argent, surmounted by that of St. Patrick gules, over all the cross of St. George fimbriated of the second."

The union jack is only used on flags, except on the shield placed by the side of the figure of Britannia (there are two to a few Britanniarium on our copper coins, but only one on the silver,) on our pennies and halfpennies. It was granted as an honorable augmentation to the late Duke of Wellington, to be borne on a shield of pretence. The term jack is supposed to have originated from Jacques, the French word for James, the monarch who first ordered its use.—English Paper

Dictionary making appears to be a healthy business. Johnson saw seventy-five years; Walker lived to a good old age; Dr. Worcester, who died recently, was eighty-one; Noah Webster was eighty-five when he passed away; and the Express lately reported the death of Dr. Richardson, at ninety.

THURSDAY, JUNE 28, 1866.

HOW MATTERS ARE AT PRESENT

The great excitement is over, for the present. The prisoners taken by the U. S authority have been liberated on bail—straw bail—and strange to say both Democrats and republicans are making political capital against the President, out of his just proclamation.

Roberts and Sweeney are declining and, for the time being, Stephens comes forward but he is not likely to make a strike.

No news from England has reached us since they received intelligence of the raid at Erie, but a week will bring British opinion of the matter. The easy settlement of the marauders, however, will forbid much comment.

EUROPEAN

Affairs have a dark side in Europe just now. Diplomatic relations between Prussia and Austria are suspended. Ere long we may hear of the first encounter of the armies. They both have large armies in the field. Italy is still arming, and Italian and Austrian troops may meet by next accounts.—England and France are, so far, out of the quarrel. Reports are current of some understanding being come to between France and the United States and Mexico but they are so confused that they cannot be unraveled yet.

Maximilian, it is reported is in trouble, and again we hear of his establishing himself so firmly as to defy the Monroe doctrine.

AT HOME.

Canada is quiet, too much so perhaps for her own interest. All parties have as if by mutual consent left the confederation matter in the hands of our Legislatures. Let us hope that we have not trusted too much to them, and that they in the settlement will do us no injustice, and will not saddle a constitution that will are long require patching.

There is a move in all the Provinces, and another month or two will bring about all the results asked, whether for well or for woe.

The present parliament is about to move in the usury question. This has been a vexed question for some time, yet there appears an interest rather opposed to the people's interest at work. A usury law requires time for serious consideration; the last legislation on money matters has not proved satisfactory. A delegation from the provinces is expected to leave very soon for England. Yet surely local governments should be discussed before confiding matters to the Imperial Government. Such an important matter should be well arranged, and made public before its final completion.

OUR VOLUNTEERS.

THE ACTION OF THE COUNTY COUNCIL.

In our last issue we chronicled the fact that the Volunteers of this County had returned to their homes. They were received cordially by the people, by the Town and County Councils, and by all classes of citizens. The County Council being in session nobly came forward and in connection with the Town Council presented the privates and non-commissioned officers with the sum of ten dollars each. This, we consider, one of the best and cheapest steps the two Councils could take to ensure the good working of the Volunteer corps in this county. These noble fellows, many of whom are but poorly prepared to bear the loss of their time, and their families not at all prepared to lose their head and provider, if such should be their fate, nobly, and almost at a moment's warning, left their homes, their wives, their families—all that is near and dear to them—and proceeded to the front, not knowing the result. These men had to remain there on very short allowance, just 25 cents per day and their board—a scanty pittance that to provide for a family—and at the same time liable to all the untoward chances incident to war, yes, and inodent to fatigue and privation in proceeding to the scene of action. We feel certain, therefore, that these noble fellows deserve more than twice ten dollars, as every man in the county will at once admit, and no act of the Council for many years so well deserves the praise and approbation of the people as this one. And we are sure that no cheaper means of protection and defence can be devised. This act will ensure the Volunteers' ready action in case of threatened danger again, and no other act would tend more to prove the interest we have in our Volunteers, and the sympathy we have for them and their little ones. This, too, will be the means of ensuring ready cooperation with the authorities when dangers are near, the Volunteers knowing that their wives and families will be seen to in their absence and provided for. We say the Council of the County and Town of Peterboro deserve praise and warmest approbation for their justice,

The Presentation to the Volunteers.

It was wisely agreed by the two Councils that it would be best to present the Volunteers with the money at once, and while the County Council was in session. Accordingly, on Tuesday, the different Companies were called together and after marching to Ashburnham parade-ground where they went through various battalion evolutions in a manner that would do credit to regular soldiers they proceeded to the Court House Square preceded by Philps' Brass Band, which had arrived by the train just in time to be present with the Companies. The whole of the Companies were under the control of Major Edwin Poole. When they had arranged themselves in the form of three sides of a triangle, Mayor Scott read the following address;—

To the non-commissioned officers and privates of the Peterborough County Volunteers:—

We have met you here to-day in the name and on behalf of the citizens of the County and Town of Peterboro to express to you our earnest admiration of the commendable spirit which prompted your willing departure to ward the protection of your native or adopted country, and our sincere and heartfelt gratitude and thanks for the credit your cheerful response to the call of your country has reflected on this community.

In looking towards some befitting mark of the respect and admiration which your disinterested patriotism has implanted in the breast of the community, we are driven to a consideration of the circumstances surrounding your departure for what we all believed to be the scene of danger.

We recall the fact that the notice of your departure was so brief as to obviate any adequate preparation of your circumstances for an absence, whose duration could not be foreseen, and whose consequences to those whom you left behind, and whose place in your affections was second only to your love of country, it was impossible to measure.

That many of you have severed the ties of affection, (fruitful if they were again to be united) and torn yourselves from those who were dependent upon your subsistence and your sympathy, from your wives, from your children, and from those who may be called to an equally near and dear place in your affections.

That when taking your departure from our midst, you had ample assurance that the enemy were massing on our frontier, in the determination to hazard their existence up in the issue of their desperate attempt, and not one of you but firmly believed that ere the intervention of many hours you would be called upon to peril your lives upon the battle field. That we esteem a nobler and a cooler courage, a better and more abiding spirit, than that by which you would be sustained upon the scene of present hostilities.

That following you into the new relations of a soldier's career—proverbially severe up on those as yet unused to the arts of war, we know that a soldierly bearing characterized you throughout, and returning once more to your homes, you bring with you the unalterable conviction that in our own Volunteers we have a standing army of protection, the paladium of our liberties and the security of our homes.

And to these reflections succeed our determination to express a grateful remembrance of your gallant conduct in such a manner that will give a tangible form to our earnest consideration, and serve at the same time to compensate you in part, at all events, for the material losses you have sustained.

We have, therefore, in view of the premises, the sincere and earnest pride and gratification of presenting you each with a sum of money, in testimony of our appreciation of your gallant conduct in the past.

Just at the side of the Mayor was the Warden, the members of the County Council, Town Council, the Sheriff and several other distinguished citizens. The whole ground was covered with people, the ladies predominating, who eagerly sought to do honor to the Volunteers. After the address the Warden and Mayor presented each man with the sum of ten dollars, as a small remuneration for their loss of time, &c., in going to the front, and as a token of the appreciation of their readiness to go to defend the homes and families of the people whom these Councillors represented.

After the presentation, Color-Sergeant Johnston, of the Rifles read the following address, thanking the Councils on behalf of the men:—

To the Warden, Mayor and Councillors of the Town of Peterborough:—

GENTLEMEN,

In the name and on behalf of the non-commissioned officers and privates of the militia force of the County of Peterborough, I return you our heartfelt thanks for the kind and flattering reception you have this day given us, and also for the tangible form in which you have proved your appreciation of the services we have rendered during the short though, as far as we were concerned, bloodless campaign in which we have been engaged.

When called by those in authority, to rush to our rifles and as speedily as possible to report our selves on the front, to repel the hordes of assassins who threatened our homes and firesides with ruin and rapine, we knew not but ere many hours one and all of us would be engaged in deadly struggle on the bloody field. We all knew that we were in the path of duty, and where duty called we were bound to go, and this day has proved to us that what we went to battle for was and is worthy of the dearest sacrifices that man can give, even that of life itself. We went at the call of our country to defend our hearths and homes, our loved ones, and all that is dear to the heart of man; and in such a cause who amongst us would be a craven or a coward?

We only did what every true Canadian would be willing to do, and our most earnest wish is that never a foe again trod on the soil of our beloved Canada we may be in the fore front of the battle.

Gentlemen, I may be permitted to speak a word in praise of the men you sent from this County and Town, as in the position in which I was placed I had even more opportunities of seeing how they conducted themselves than the commissioned officers. I was always among them, and from the time they left home until they came back, there never was a complaint against any man in the force. They conducted themselves soberly and steadily, and now I am sure that each of them feel satisfied in their own minds that with you they can trust all they have in this world, if they should be again called to meet the foe; and also that you can trust them, as far as they are concerned, in defending your homes and loved ones from the despoilers.

We thank you for the kindness shown to our families in our absence. We thank you for every mark of approbation you have shown ourselves; and in the name of the Voulunteers of Canada we this day thank you, as you have proved by your acts that whether as Soldiers, Volunteers or Civilians Canadians are one in heart and soul, and as long as we remain so, those who go forth to defend our shores, depending in all confidence on those who remain at home, that their loved ones will be cared for, and those who remain at home, knowing that they who have gone forth to defend their coasts are trustworthy and fearless. May one and all of us as Canadians still rely on the God of battles, and then in all cases we will come forth more than conquerors.

Again thanking you in the name of the Volunteers now before you for your kindness, I beg leave to retire. But before doing so I would ask my comrades in arms to excuse any imperfections in this reply, as I learned the fact that upon me had devolved that duty, only about fifteen minutes before we were required to march out to-day.

Signed on behalf of the Volunteers,

Wm. JOHNSTON,
Sergt-Major, Rifles.

Peterboro', June 22, 1866.

This being over the four Companies marched round the Square and under the Court House where the ladies were assembled, and who showered boquets and other insigne of their approv l. While standing in front of the Court House P. Pearce, Esq. addressed them, praising their appearance and conduct, and assuring them that such conduct would not soon be forgotten by the loyal citizens of this County; but we were at such a distance from him we could only catch a few words and it was impossible to get near. The men in marching were the admiration of all, for steadiness and regularity, and the military appearance of the grounds as they marched and countermarched was rather imposing. They then left the Square and separated, when S. Norton, Jailer, entertained the Band to a lunch which he thoughtfully had prepared.

THE DINNER.

The Warden presiding, and on his right Major Poole, Capt. J. Z. Rogers, Capt. Hon Sidney Smith, Col. Dennistoun, and A. H. Campbell, Esq., and on his left Capt. Kennedy, Capt. Rubidge, and Major Rogers.—The Revs. V. Clementi, of Lakefield, Beck and Cantlon, of Peterboro', were also present. The vice-chairs were occupied by Mayor Scott and Sheriff Hall, who were supported by members of the Town and County Councils, and other distinguished citizens to the number of about 80 in all. After the cloth was withdrawn the secretary of Committee by the two Councils read letters of apology from T. Short, Esq., Judge Boulcher, the Rev J. M. Rogers, and J. Gilmour; also from Messrs. Sheffield, Bobcaygeon, and D. Sutherland, Ashburnham, and Col. Williams, of Port Hope, regretting that they could not be present.

The Warden then having told all to prepare bumpers—gave the first toast as usual on such occasions "The Queen." In doing so he remarked that it was one that needed no speech to recommend it or to arouse loyal feeling in relation thereto in the breasts of true Britains. The name of Victoria was honored and esteemed by every one who heard it uttered, and loved by all who knew her. He was proud to be one of her subjects, to be a Britain was no mean honor, and he was well aware that every Canadian would as had already been done, rush to arms to protect her rights, and to repel any disturbly villain who would dare to invade her territory, or desecrate our soil. He therefore, could with full assurance of its being received with loyal enthusiasm by every one present, give the toast,—"The Queen" which was vociferously received, echoed through the whole room. The band played "God Save the Queen."

The next toast was "The Governor General, Her Majesty's Representative in these Provinces." This one, he felt would be received with almost equal enthusiasm. He was also pleased to be able to say that he was an Irishman—and a worthy one too, all Irishmen were not Fenians. The people of Canada were ready to obey the call in defence of their homes, their families, their Queen and country, and the people. He would therefore propose "The Governor General of these Provinces," which was enthusiastically received. Sung—"The Irish Gentleman."

The Mayor then gave "The Army, Navy and Volunteers." The army, he remarked, had done its duty, and had conquered on many a bloody field; the Navy rode triumphantly on every sea, and late circumstances had shewn that our Volunteers were not unworthy sons of their worthy sires, and, therefore, in trusting our defence and protection to them we should not be trusting to a broken reed.

The band played Rule Brittania.

Capt. Frazer returned thanks for the honor done to the army of Great Britain, but for him to praise the British army would be bad taste. He would just remark that it had well and gallantly done its duty heretofore, and he knew that it would do so again, if required, and he felt that the Volunteers would follow in the footsteps of that army that had conquered every foe, and in every clime.

Capt. Rubidge returned thanks for the navy, remarking that all knew how the navy had done its duty as England always expected, and if called out again that duty would be as faithfully performed. The power of Great Britain was felt in every country and in every clime; and our army, our navy and our Volunteers would maintain that power to the end of time.

Major Poole responded for the Volunteers. They had long labored to earn a remembrance and name, they had obtained it; they had worked, and would do so again, every one of them; their great and only wish being, as they had eagerly sought before, a brush with the foe.

The Warden then proposed "Our Guests." In doing so he remarked that so much has been said already he would have to go over the ground again, but this was allowable, as too much could not be said nor too often repeated. When these brave fellows had gone to the front many a thought crossed the minds of friends; but in looking at the fields as he passed along he asked himself would these fields be desecrated? when he was forced to answer NO! for our Volunteers were at the front. Would our homes be ruined or laid waste? and again he felt NO! the answer for our Volunteers were at the front. Would our altars be despoiled? and again the emphatic NO! never flashed to his mind, for our gallant fellows were ready to defend them against any foe whatever.

Band—"Auld Lang Syne."

Captain Kennedy, as one of the guests, returned thanks for the honor conferred. He felt a little pride rise on being asked to the banquet, and on being a Volunteer. On his way to the cars, to the front, in all his marching and counter-marching he felt easy, because he knew he was remembered by those at home, and that the sympathies with the Volunteers were heartfelt sympathies.

Capt. J. Z. Rogers acknowledged the honor done him on this occasion. it was an honor to be present at the banquet. As a guest he returned thanks for the honor and praise they had received; yet what had they done? Nothing but their duty. It was very satisfactory to know that their acts were duly appreciated. It was a pleasing fact to know they had done their duty, and he knew every man was ready to do so again, if required.

Lieut. Rogers, in returning thanks, felt that the honor was due to Capts. Poole and Kennedy and Major Rogers for their up-hill work in raising and drilling companies—to them indeed the honor was due—they had worked night hours and severe (threats we, we) and now they deserved the praise.

Lieut. Bowker also returned thanks in the absence of Capt. Leigh.

Capt., the Hon. Sidney Smith felt himself only half fledged, he had received no clothes yet, consequently was naked; how could he speak? He could not appear in parade lest his nakedness might appear. He must send word to government he was naked, and tell them how they had placed men in four cars, without a seat, without a eating place, without drink or meat or anything, it was foul, disgraceful, and they must be told that if they call out the Volunteers again they must use them better, but he must stop. (Cries, go on, go on.)

Rev Mr. Clements considered this a very pleasant day to him, it was the anniversary of his birth, also of his first landing in America. He was proud to be a resident of Canada; he was proud to be an Englishman but he was doubly proud to be a Canadian to-day. There were two kinds of courage—moral and physical, the moral, he considered the most desirable and most efficient. Every man possessed physical courage in some degree, and at particular times; but the English, Irish, and Scotch always possessed both in a pre-eminent degree. Canadians, as their sons, possessed high moral courage as well as physical. He (Mr. C.) had a very active sympathy for the Volunteers, and having time to spare he had visited them in the various places to which they had been sent, acting also as a kind of express agent for them, bearing many articles of all sorts, and everywhere he had received the most gratifying accounts of their good behaviour. He felt concerned to say that here, in Canada, the laws of nature were inverted for as a general law, if a stone was thrown into the pond the stronger wave was formed nearest the centre; but the loyalty of Canadians was stronger and more active than even at home. Although Canadians were more than 3000 miles from the centre, our loyalty was in an inverse ratio to the distance, as had been shown by the late turn out of the Volunteers.

Rev. Mr. Beck, in responding, did not feel himself a guest, being of the Town. He, however, like all that had gone before him, was constrained to speak nothing but praise of the Volunteers for whom the banquet was been prepared. He regretted that although much had been done that they were not able to do more, and not only drive the raiders out but lay them. True the time was short, about 48 hours from their entry to their return departure; scarcely 12 hours from the news reached Toronto till the Volunteers were on the frontier, and he only regretted that their spirit had been so ready, but their readiness showed that hereafter we would not need to look to Britain for protection, we had protection in our Volunteers.

Rev. Mr. Cantlon, in rising to respond, remarked that he was certainly unprepared to speak and the more so because his name did not appear among the list of speakers, yet he could not refrain from saying a few words. The present excitement had its good as well as its evil effects. It had caused trouble and cost, no doubt, but both were not too much to give for the benefits received. During the last three weeks we had been writing a history, so to speak, for ourselves, that would remain while men remained, and that history taught many useful lessons. The Americans might learn a lesson from it. They thought that they could do with us as they pleased, but lately they had found that we were a hard nut to crack—one that would not so easily be broken. There was a page for Britain in our history, as she might learn that we still admired her, her principles and institutions, and would do much for her, and to maintain them, and to manifest our affection for our beloved Queen. There was a page for ourselves, heretofore we had been diffident, but this would give us confidence in ourselves. The London Times and a few other croakers had talked about Canadians. They did not understand us, they did not know what we would do in time of trial.—But we have shewn them that we possess British pluck and British hearts. It was painfully true that our history had been written in blood, but would on that account be more indelible, never to be erased.

Sheriff Hall then proposed "Our Sedentary Militia." Col. R. Denniston responded to the toast. He felt pleased that the militia had been proposed, for it thought they had been snuffed out by the Volunteers. He differed from the speaker who dated our History from the last three week—it began in 1812. twenty years after our birth as a people; then an important page had been written, when Canadian Militia almost unarmed compared with the present saved the country to Britain and hurled the American hosts from our shores, by their gallant determination. In 37 they had one with out clothes or arms, and in the front difficulty they rose as a man in defence of British rights. Those Chicago Volunteers were noble fellows having drawn their inspiration from their sires, and with such men as those 4 millions were a match for 25 millions, as such men can never be conquered. He referred to those present who had dared to cut out the Caroline and set her adrift over Niagara, and with hearts as high as these Canada never could be conquered.

Col. Wallis felt they. (The Sed. Militia) had been thrown in the back ground; left at home, as home guards; but they must be satisfied to take the lot assigned them.

Major R. D. Rogers being loudly called for, remarked that he was not a speech-maker, he could work better than speak In reference to what he had done he thought he, as all his ancestors, had done his duty. His grandfather had fought for British sway and was at the taking of the country from Quebec to Mackinaw. His father had suffered the loss of all for Britain, and came to Canada, not to reap the spoil, but to cut down the forest for a living rather than submit to any other power. He, himself, was proud to be a native Canadian, and as such, served his country in every capacity. In '37 in the sedentary militia, when for five weeks he never had his clothes off; since that he had done what some call playing soldier, but lately events had shewn whether it was play or not.

P. M. Grover, Esq., being called on, said that he was the son of a U. E. L., but they had not lost their ardor by coming to Canada. They came to suffer in the new state of the country, and their sons were still ready to suffer for the same great nation. The Canadians had shown the United States, long ago, what they could do, and the Volunteers had shewn the cut-throats what Canadians were made of.—These cut-throats thought they had sympathizers here, but they got disappointed, not one went near them, either here were none, or they dare not shew themselves, and he would now like to see a live Fenian. We had, it was true, been misrepresented in England, but time had shewn we were ready to defend Britain rather than rebel against her.

A. H. Campbell, Esq., remarked that although many were Canadians by birth, therefore of necessity, many were Canadians by choice; these latter also fought by choice. He thought the Volunteer force could to snuff out the Sedentary Militia, as with trained officers and men the Volunteers were more certain of success; as the stage led by the One were more certain to win than the lead led by the stage.

P. Pearce, Esq., then gave "The Bar." He wondered why a clod hopper should be called upon to propose the gentleman of the long robe. In our relations with the United States they had been called cousins, but he poor cousins they were. He was proud to say that every profession and nation belonged to the Volunteers bands. Lawyers were ready to go—yea had gone. Our history truly had been written in blood, but he hoped it would show that our blood is not too much to give for liberty. Our lawyers were ready to charge the enemy and they were also ready to charge say clearly who would go to them.

Messrs. Weller, Scott, and Dumble responded in appropriate terms.

A. C. Dunlop, Esq., proposed "The Medical profession." Drs. Kimball, Harvey, Bell and Poole replied in short speeches as the hour indicated shortenings us. Here three cheers were proposed by Mr. Dumble, and most heartily given for Dr. King, of the Welland Canal Field Battery, for his bravery and ability in the late raid.

"The Banking Interest" was then proposed by Mr. Campbell, and replied to by A. Smith, Esq., Bank of Toronto, R. Richardson, Esq., Bank of Montreal and Mr. Eastwood, of the Bank of Ontario.

"The Lumbering Interests of the County" was given by Hon. S. Smith W. A. Scott replying he knew the importance of the lumber trade in the County. He paid more for lumber every year than all the wheat grown in the County, hence the importance of the the trade, and he knew that the Banks were an advantage to the Lumberer, and Lumberers were an advantage to the Banks.

E. Burnham, Esq., gave "The Back Town-ships." Messrs. Carroll and Peck responding.

Mr. Carroll remarked, that like Douro, Otonabee, &c., the back country had good land, although some of it was rough; he believed in free grants as necessary to the settling of the new townships. In regard to loyalty, every man in Canada he believed loyal, and why should he not—a good country, good laws, free as the air or water as a people, and he would like to see a Fenian under such circumstances.

C. A. Weller, Esq., "The Mercantile Interest." Mr. Clarke replied.

T. M. Fanhaun, Esq., gave "The Agricultural Interest." In doing which he considered that politicism may be all directed, and the people when aroused may act over hastily; but here we were not serfs, but an educated, free people, and should be happy. We all felt the victory was ours, and all felt the pang of sorrow for the fallen. His heart beat for those brave sailors and soldiers who had suffered for the country.

J. Walton, Esq, gave "Canada Our Home"

Mr. Dunnet, "The Ladies"

The Chairman, "The Press."

Messrs. Stratton, Romain, and Poole replied.

The hour of 3 warned many where they ought to be, and they, taking the hint, hastened away.

LAKEFIELD AFFAIRS.

DINNER TO THE VOLUNTEERS.

ABOUT 110 SAT DOWN TO DINNER.

The denizens of the aspiring little village being determined not to be behind any place in doing honor to the Volunteers who went to defend their country, home and altars, gave them a dinner on Tuesday evening.—The tables were spread in the drill shed, a spacious building belonging to Messrs Shaw & White, 100×40 feet. This they decorated with evergreens, and with flags innumerable, and with mottoes in imitation of "God save the Queen," and "Hurrah for our loyal volunteers," most tastefully constructed. Great praise is accorded to the committee of managment, Messrs. Sherin, Beatty, Graham, &c., for the success of the whole entertainment.

Rev. V. Clements occupied the chair on the occasion, whose name is a guarantee for the management of toasts, &c.

Messrs. I. Garbutt, Lewis Davis and J. Carnegie, Jr. occupied the vice-chairs.—The guests were the Lakefield company, 48 members. Major Poole, of the Peterboro' Rifles, Capt. Kenn dy, Peterboro' Infantry, J. Z Rogers, Ashburnham Infantry, Lieut Rogers, Rifles, Capt. Leigh, Lieut. Bowker, Lakefield Infantry.

Members of the County Council present. E. Ingram, Esq., Warden, P. Pearce, P. M. Grover, J. Gilmour, J. Carnegie, Jr., S. S. Peck, Geo. Fitzgerald and J. Carroll; and Mayor Scott, of Peterboro'.

After the demolishing of the good things provided, the great work of the evening commenced.

The chairman gave the great toast in Canada, "The Queen", which was received with loud and continued cheering. Song by the whole company, "God save the Queen."

The next toast was also from the chair. "The Prince and Princess of Wales, and the other members of the Royal Family." Song, "British Lion." by Private Mellor.

Mr. Garbutt then gave "The Army, Navy and Volunteers of Canada."

He remarked, in introducing it, that when he went to the front in '37, he had to go almost naked, no rifles then, and he was a lucky fellow who obtained an old musket. There were axe handles and bludgeons of every description, but neither gun nor bayonet but for the first 12, who were fortunate enough to be first served; but now he was not only ready and willing to fight for his country, but his sons also were ready and willing.

Major Poole and Capts. Kennedy, Rogers, Leigh, and Lieut. Rogers and Bowker responded.

Song, "The Organ Grinder," by Private Higgins.

The chairman proposed "The Governor General". Song, "For he is a jolly good fellow."

Lewis Davis, Esq., next proposed "Our Guests." This was responded to by Capt Leigh, Lieut. Bowker, and Capts. Kennedy and Rogers.

R. Strickland proposed "Our County," to which the Warden and other members of the County Council responded,

Mr. Carnegie then gave "Canada our home," to which P. Pearce and P. M. Grover, Esqs., responded.

"The Press" was next given by the chairman, to which Dr. Poole, of the "Review", responded.

J. Carnegie then gave "The Chairman," which was warmly received, and to which the chairman made ready in very suitable terms, after which the meeting broke up—every one pleased with himself, and we trust with every one else.

COUNTY COUNCIL.

As we were unable to obtain a copy of the Warden's address in time for our late issue, we give it this week. We went four times to the Council Chambers to obtain it, but could not, until too late:—

WARDEN'S ADDRESS.

GENTLEMEN,—Since we last met, the Province has been invaded by a ruthless band of marauders, whose ostensible object was the devastation of our country, the infringement of our rights and liberties, and the murdering of the inhabitants; but we have the pleasure of congratulating each other on the promptness with which they were met by our gallant Volunteers, and caused to make a hasty retreat from our shores. While we have to deplore the noble band of "The Queen's Own," who lost their lives, while others were wounded, in repelling the lawless invaders, we have at the same time a cause of thankfulness to the Great Ruler of events that the disasters were not greater. As soon as the first note of danger was sounded, a large number of the loyal and patriotic men of this County rushed to the front in response to the call of His Excellency to peril their lives in defence of their Queen and country, and protect our lives, many of them making a great sacrifice in doing so, in consequence of leaving families behind them depending entirely on them for support. I trust you will, at your earliest opportunity, take this matter into consideration, with the view of making some tangible acknowlegement of the valuable services rendered by them on that very trying occasion.

By special invitation I had an interview with a Committee of the Town of Peterboro' relative to the erection of a Drill Shed in said Town. The propriety of your joining in such an undertaking will be a matter for your consideration, and it is with pleasure that I bring the subject before you.

Since our last session I was served with a Rule Nisi, to shew cause why that portion of By-law, No. 262, authorizing the levy and collection of a certain rate on the Township of Harvey to reimburse the expenses incurred in the re-survey of said Township, should not be quashed, I at once placed the matter in the hands of the County Solicitor, but have not yet received any official notice as to the decision of the Court in the matter.

I have great pleasure in stating that after all the liabilities of the County for the financial year just ended, are paid, there will be a handsome surplus in the treasury. But this, permit me to say, is owing chiefly to the sale of debentures last year. I trust that when making your estimates for the present year you will keep this sum intact with the view of enabling your Treasurer to meet his liabilities until the County Rates are paid in.

A letter was received by your Treasurer, from the Crown Lands Department, stating that the work on the Harvey Road would not be proceeded with until the sum voted by you for said work was paid. Your Treasurer paid over said sum at once by my instructions.

The equalizing of the Assessment Rolls of the different municipalities in this county will again require your careful consideration, and I feel assured that, as it is one of the most important duties you will have to perform, it will be attended to faithfully by you with the view of doing equal justice to all concerned.

The state of the County Road and Bridges also demand your attention, and although they are in much better state now than they have been generally at this season of the year, yet it may be necessary for you to grant some small sums for their improvement.

My attention was lately called to the dangerous state of the Bridge over the Little Bobcaygeon River, by Messrs. Boyd, Esq. I immediately took such steps as were necessary to have it made safe for the travelling community, the expense incurred, and all correspondence relating thereto, will be laid before you.

The arrangements with certain parties for the right-of-way at certain deviations from the Bobcaygeon Road, have been concluded in a very satisfactory manner, and all expenses incurred in relation thereto, will be made known to you in due time.

It will be necessary for you to make provision in your estimates for meeting the expense of carrying out the provisions of the new Registry Act. And although the amount will be considerable, I trust there will be a corresponding benefit to the county.

I am happy to be able to congratulate you on the general prosperity of all classes of the community in the county, and I pray that the All Wise Counsellor may so guide and direct you in the performance of your duties that they may tend to the advancement and prosperity of this county, and the well-being of the inhabitants therein.

E. INGRAM,
Warden

Friday was spent in making arrangements to carry out the intentions of the County and Town Councils to the volunteers

Saturday was occupied in considering the report of the road and bridge committee.

On Monday the report of the joint committee for entertaining the Volunteers was received, and is as follows:—

The joint committee of the Town and County Councils appointed to pay each non-commissioned officer and private of the Volunteer force of this County, the sum of $10 each, and to make arrangements for a complimentary banquet to the officers of the same,—Beg leave to report that they have carried out the wishes of the Councils, and in doing so have expended the following sums of money, viz:—

June 25, 1866.

Also a By-law to raise a sum of money for common school purposes.

A By-law confirming a By-law of Dummer Council to close an original allowance of road was lost in committee.

TUESDAY.

The committee on roads and bridges were allowed to report again.

A motion was also passed requiring a settlement of accounts for lands sold for taxes

The committee on equalizing the assessment rolls reported.

The values are—Of Ashburnham $120,000, Asphodel per acre $7.00, Belmont $2.50, Methuen $1.00, Burleigh $1.00, Anstruther $1.00, Chandos $1.00, Carnarff $1.00, Harcourt $0.50 Bruton $0.50, Dummer $4.50, Douro $7.00, Ennismore $5.50, Galway $1.00, Minden $1.00, Dysart $1.00, Monaghan $10.00, Otonabee $9.00, Stanhope $1.00, Smith $0.00, Harvey $1.00, Snowden $1.00

A motion was passed relieving the Canadian Land Emigration Company from taxes for the lands in Harcourt.

A motion was passed requiring a certificate of the chairman of Grammar School that the school has been free for 6 months before pay ag any grant to the school.

Two By-laws, one to raise money for roads and bridges, and one to raise money for County purposes, were read and passed.

WEDNESDAY

The principle business was the report of committee on the Warden's address, a follows—there were two given, one on Wednesday and one on Thursday.

The committee are pleased to find that the Town of council of Peterboro have proffered assistance in the erection of a drill shed and hoped it would lead to the speedy completion of such a building.

The present financial position of this county is matter for congratulation, and hope the pecuniary embarrassment of the past may not be renewed.

The committee approves of the action of the Warden in instructing the Treasurer to pay over the sum voted by the this council to the Harvey road, said order being given on demand of the commissioner of Crown Lands, and hope the road may be proceeded with to completion with as little delay as possible

The prompt action of the Warden in repairing the bridge over the Little Bob as deserving of notice, at the same time would recommend that the County of Victoria be called upon to contribute their share of the expense.

The committee are pleased to find the Warden able to report the satisfactory settlement of the dispute respecting the right of way on the Bobcaygeon road.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

J. W. GILMOUR,
Chairman.

A communication from the Sheriff relating to a safe was referred to the committee on County property.

A communication from R. Morrison, for assistance to improve the Boundary line between Dummer and Belmont was referred to committee on roads and bridges.

A letter from D. Sutherland was referred to finance committee.

THURSDAY.

The principal matter was passing a By-law to separate Minden from Dysart, &c., besides other preliminary business, the receiving of the report on roads and bridges.

On motion of Mr. Carroll, seconded by Mr. Peck,—It was declared that the County Council was ready to act in concert with the Town, and with or without the government, in the erection of a drill shed in the town.

It was also agreed that those volunteers who had been at the front, but who did not receive anything, should be paid the $10 also.

There was a long discussion in relation to Smith and Harvey, especially referring to the survey of Harvey. It was finally agreed to take advice in reference to collecting the cost of survey of Harvey

The time for collecting the taxes of 1866 was extended to 1st of February, 1867.

It was also agreed to memoralise the Governor General to proceed with a lock on the Otonabee at Young's dam.

Union School Examination.

The Examination of the various departments have been going on during this week.

Miss Kyle's Room was examined on Friday last; there were but few parents or visitors present.

Parents and Guardians scarcely manifest that interest in the School that they should do.

The work is consigned to the teacher, and the people appear satisfied to leave it with him. The Room manifested careful training, the pupils acquitting themselves creditably in the branches in which they were examined.

On Monday, the 5th Division, Boys—Mr. Shortell, Teacher—was examined in Arithmetic, Algebra and Euclid, Book 1st, the definition-, solutions and explanation were lucid, and the boys manifested more readiness than at last examination.

On Tuesday, Miss Beatty's and Mr. Bap tie's Rooms were examined. There were several visitors present in the girl's division, and the examination passed off satisfactorily.

On Wednesday, the 3rd Department Boys—Mr. Griffin, Teacher—in the forenoon, and the Girls—Miss Borroman, teacher—in the afternoon was examined; both Divisions are favorably spoken of.

Mr. W. Finlay, of Smith, informs us that after several day's search he at length found track of his mares which he lost about six weeks ago. Mr. Finlay was directed to Onondaga, near Brantford, here those celebrated racers to whom we drew attention some time since, reside, and with whom the mares had been seen very lately; but the Constable so managed the affair that the Johnstons got out of the way, taking the span of mares with them. What a pity that is that these scoundrels cannot be brought to justice and made pay the penalty of their villainy, and how much it is to be regretted that officials are employed who are ready to aid and abet a band of black-legs and robbers.

Theatrical.

The Victoria Hall was graced on Wednesday night with a distinguished Combination Troupe. This was their first appearance in Peterboro'. The rendering of the pieces, the personations, and the whole evening's proceedings, we learn, were good, the different performers sustaining their parts well.—But as lovers of such things can appreciate seeing better than descriptions, they will be gratified by attending some of the performances.

Child Found.

Yesterday evening the body of a child was found in the Little Lake, and an inquest was held by Dr Poole. From appearance it had lain in the water for some time, and had evidently been placed there to conceal it.

We learn that the Bible Christian Sabbath School Anniversary was a complete success. The tea was excellent the attendance large, and the speaking, by the Rev. Mr. Hodge, of Hampton; Rev. Mr. Gilmour, P. Pearce, Esq, and the Rev. Mr. Cantlon.

The Warden, E. Ingram, Esq., presided on the occasion.

VICTORIA WARDER.—The Omemee Warder having changed its locality and its name, is now published in Lindsay, the capital of the County of Victoria. We hope that it will prove as great a favorite in Lindsay as it did in Omemee. Although with its change of name its political creed is not changed, still the Warder has our best wishes for its success.

Wesleyan Conference.

The Wesleyan Conference closed their annual sitting in Montreal, on Friday last.—The following are the Ministers appointed to the Circuits in this Town and County for the present term:

THE RACES.

The Spring meeting of the Peterboro' Turf Club commenced on Wednesday, on the new course, near the Locks. The course, which is only just finished, is a credit to the gentlemen who have carried the work through in a way that entitles them to the support of every lover of good sport. The track is a full half mile and is in splendid order, the race of Tuesday having assisted materially in making it so.—The grounds are fenced in with a close board fence nine feet high, with two gateways, one for carriages the other for people on foot.

On account of the rain on Tuesday and the threatening appearance of the firmament, the number present was not as large as it would have been; but still there was a good attendance. The

To Francis Bourrne, Esq., M. P. P.

A great deal has been said and written of late upon the sub ect of interest for the use of money, and as to the expediency or inexpediency of re-enacting the usury laws As it is more than probable that ether a bill be made during the present Session of Parliament to remove all existing restrictions, and to establish what is called free trade n money, I claim the liberty of saying a few words upon the subject.

I am opposed to all such legislation; I am an advocate of the usury laws. In common with what I believe to be a great majority of this people of this Province, I assert that a great evil was inflicted upon the country by the repeal of these laws, and that the result of their repeal has been just what many of our wisest and best men predicted, to depreciate the value of real estate and to give into the hands of capitalists and money leaders the control of the most vital interests of the people. The late Sir J. B. Robinson truly said, when he was in parliament, "repeal the usury laws and increase the rate of interest for money, and you depreciate the value of real estate," and the result has verified his prediction.

Is it any wonder then that the question of interest for money is receiving a good deal of public attention?

On all sides we see daily evidences of the evils caused by a repeal of the usury laws.—Now that free license has been given to impose what burden men please for the use of money, usury has been made lawful and, therefore, respectable, and the result is that the interest of money has gone up while the value of real estate has gone down. However much the advocates of high interest may declare that the low price of property is not the result of high interest for money, still there is the fact patent to all men, that ever since the repeal of the usury laws the market value of real estate has continued to go down until at length land can scarcely be sold at all, and when sold it is only done at a ruinous sacrifice, whilst day after day some of the best farms in the country have been taken from their owners and forced upon the market and sold for a tithe of their value, by loan societys and money leaders, because the borrowers could no longer pay the enormous interest which was demanded of them; and in many instances families have been driven from their homes where they had spent their best days in hard toil for their old age, and they have been driven forth upon the world ruined.

And yet we are told that high interest works no evil, and that money, as well as property, must have freedom of price.

The great cry of the advocates of high interest is that money and property are identical—that they are equal—that the owners of money stand upon the same level as the owners of the soil, that the rights of the former are the same as the sweat and toil and privation and suffering of the poor farmer struggling his way through the wilderness striving to hew out a home for himself and his dependent family.—We are asked to believe that money is property. In that sense of the term, that there is no difference in fact between money and land or produce, and that their respective owners are also equal. That the man with his hundred acres of land, or his load of grain, is in the same position as the man with his bag of gold. That the farmer has as much liberty and as much power as the money lender.

And, yet, what is the fact? In the material sense of the term money is not property; it is but a type, a representative of property, a something in itself of no value whatever, but made valuable only because of its representative character. If it were not for this it would be useless. Substitute some other circulating medium for gold and (as money) what would be the value of gold then? This shows that as a mere circulating medium, and beyond its mere representative character as such, gold is not property and must not be placed alongside of pr perty as an article of free trade. And as a representative of value and a medium of the sale and exchange of property, gold possesses a power that property can never possess. Well has it been said that money is power

Look at the position of the man with money and the man with property. The latter is striving to cultivate and improve his land and to raise and sell his produce. He has been unfortunate He has had bad crops, or it may be his barn is full of grain. He wants money.—He is in debt and is pressed for payment. He He offers his creditor security, or he offers him payment in produce. The creditor is himself in debt and cannot take this. He applies for a loan of money. Now look at the position of the two men. There stands the owner of the thing called money looking coldly and imperiously upon his neighbor, while there stands the owner of the land and the grain applicating for the loan. His land and his produce go for nothing. What is wanting is not property, but a thing called money—a thing in itself of no value whatever, but made valuable because of its accidental character. And so in order to obtain this he is forced by the law to submit to exertion To submit to such terms as in the end will surely bring him to ruin. In proportion to his necessities he is made to pay a high rate of interest, and this is called justice. Every day that passes by wit ut sex just such cases as this, and now we are told it is right and must be submitted to.

One of the reasons advanced in favor of what is called free trade in money, is that laws made against usury are evaded and broken, and therefore there should be no such laws. If this be a good reason, then there ought to be no laws at all, for they are all broken. There should be no laws against the unlicensed sale of intoxicating drinks, because it is evaded and broken. There should be no laws against stealing, none against murder, because they are broken.

Another reason given is, that by abolishing restrictions upon interest, money will flow into the country and its abundance will reduce its value, and consequently reduce the rate of interest. This can never be the case in a young and growing country like Canada, where improvement absorbs capital faster than it can be supplied, and where the demand must be greater than the supply for generations to come. And the effect of repealing the usury laws has been to convert every man who owns a hundred dollars or upwards into a money lender Even farmers are withdrawing their capital from their legitimate business and investing it in mortgages instead of investing it in more land or in further improving their own farms. This shews that it is more profitable to loan out money than to invest it in the soil. And what is the result of this? Land is comparatively speaking valueless; and so men coming into the country intending to settle in it and do business and thus improve the country, find as soon as they arrive here that they can make more by lending their money than they can by investing it in real estate or in business, and so they too become money lenders and not property owners, and thus there is no demand for property. They say, what is true, that they can get ten or twenty per cent for their money, whereas, if they invested it in real estate it would not realize six per cent, and so they will not buy unless the price of the land is reduced so low as to give them the same return from it as they can make by loaning their money at the high rate of interest; and this is one principal reason why farms that are worth a thousand pounds will not sell for one half that sum.

To remedy this state of things the usury laws must be restored—and restored too with all their former penalties, and not, as proposed by a simple forfeiture of the excess of interest A condition like this carries with it no punishment and leaves the borrower as much at the mercy of the lender as ever.

What is money? Why should there be interest upon it? And why should not the rate of interest be regulated? This latter is a question of principle and not of expediency. Legislation is based on principle and not upon expediency. Why is it necessary for parliament to grant to another the right to make and issue money? If it has a right to do this it surely has a right to place some limit upon the use of money so issued. Why does the Legislature place a limit to the rate of interest charged by the banks? If it has a right to do this it has the same right in respect of other institutions and persons. If the Legislature ought not to interfere with the use of money, if money is an article of trade like property, then what right has government to interfere with the article at all? Why not let it be made and issued the same as property is made and disposed of?

It is said that there should be free trade in money as with property. Money is not property, it is the representative of value only, that is the value of property, and is intended as a circulating medicine in lieu of property, for general convenience. It is a mere creature of the mind, created for artificial purposes, without substance or value further than those artificial purposes themselves require.

The argument against a usury law is based upon the assumption that restrictive laws are bad in themselves and are ineffectual for the purposes contemplated. If this argument is good in this case it must be good in all cases and thus they must be abolished in respect to every thing else. Suppose that grain, like money, was in the hands of a few men; suppose only a few were allowed to produce it. Of course grain being an entirely indispensable article to the wants of mankind it must be had by mankind. Suppose the few producers and owners combined to raise the price, as mens wants increased until the article was beyond mens reach, would it not be the duty of government to step in as they do even now in times of great scarcity and regulate the price of bread? Then why should it not equally be their duty to protect the people against the extortion of the owners of that which represents value and procures bread. Government is bound to protect the people against oppression and to secure them against those who by reason of the privileges conferred by government are committing injustice and injury, just as the Legislature passes laws against stealing another's goods, against fraud or extortion, against breaches of the excise or revenue laws, against the vendors of liquor without license, against fraudulent pretences and against many other things besides. But it is not pretended that such laws as these are wrong, it is not pretended that they ought not to exist, because they are violated every day, but yet it is falsely argued that the same principle ought not to be applied in the case of the lender of money, and that the Legislature has no right in this instance to interfere and say that they shall not unjustly take advantage of the necessities of others and by means thereof oppress and rain them. This would indeed be making flesh of one and flesh of another. The Jewish laws forbade all interest In every country there are laws restraining the interest of money. In England the decisions of the courts have gone far enough to punish all breaches or evasions of the laws; so much so as to render it next to impossible to evade them; and if this can be done in England it can be done here, and it was done here as much as it was possible to enforce any other law.

But say, the advocates of high interest, if you reinstate the usury laws you will drive away all capital. Reinstate the usury laws and only banks and other moneyed corporations will cease to do business among us. Reinstate the usury laws and our country will be ruined. In other words they say, give us the right to charge what interest we please and then with high interest will come prosperity and happiness

Such advocates appear to consider that this question has but one side to it, that it is only the lenders of money who have a right to be heard That the complaints or the welfare of the people are not to be considered at all, but that their wishes and their interests are to be sacrificed to the rapacious demands of the money lenders.

What right have banks and other money lenders to demand that parliament shall legislate expressly for their benefit? Why were banks and other moneyed corporations erected if not for the use and benefit of the people? Why are they to be allowed to dictate to parliament and to claim special legislation in their favour at the expense and against the interests and wishes of the whole country? If their demands are alone to be considered, then they have such right; but if Legislation is to be made, not alone for the benefit of a few but for the benefit and advantage of the whole people, then I say look to the people and not to the money lenders. Save the country first.

GENIUS AND LABOUR.—Alexander Hamilton once said to an intimate friend, men give me some credit for genius, all the genius I have lies just in this, when I have a subject in hand I study it profoundly day and night it is before me. I explore it in all its bearings—my mind becomes pervaded with it, and every one who has used the "Canadian Pain Destroyer" can speak of the magical effect it has in subduing coughs, colds, pleurisy rheumatism, cramps, or all pains of the human body. Sold by all Medicine Dealers at 25 cts per bottle.

DARLEY'S
Arabian Heave Remedy and Condition Medicine

IS positively superior to any or all other preparations for the cure of Heaves, Coughs, Thick and Broken Wind, and all diseases which affect the Wind of Horses; also, as a Condition Medicine, surpassing every thing of the kind; is easy to give, sure to cure, and safe in all cases and at all times, and does not prevent the horse from being worked while using it.

It cleanses the breathing apparatus, by removing from the air cells the coagulable lymph, or that secretion which in Heaves clogs them, causing a difficulty in breathing, and by its action on the diseased part causing the mucous membrane to resume its natural dimensions, thus equalizing the circulation of the blood, and restoring the dis ended vessels to their natural size; by its use the horse's appetite is improved, all derangements of the digestive organs corrected, softening the skin, and giving to the coat a sleek and shining appearance.

NOVELS AND SONG BOOKS.

A NUMBER of the latest Novels and Song Books have been received and for sale by GRAHAM & STRATTON.
Peterborough, May 1st, 1866.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any Cologne, and is unlike the finer and purer, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headache, &c. It is manufactured from the rich roseborn Magnolia, and has obtained a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by Dumas Barnes & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

"Jee so!"—"Exactly!"—Solon Shingle said; they were there "every time." If he felt "awley" in the morning, he took Plantation Bitters; if he felt weary at night, he took Plantation Bitters; if he lacked appetite, was weak, languid or mentally oppressed, he took Plantation Bitters; and they never failed to set him on his pins square and firm.

Few persons want any better authority; but as some may, just read the following:

" " " I owe much to you, for I verily believe the Plantation Bitters have saved my life.

REV. W. H. WAGONER, Madrid, N. Y."

" " " I have been a great sufferer from Dyspepsia, and had to abandon preaching. " " The Plantation Bitters have cured me.

REV. C. A. MILLWOOD New York City.

" " " I had lost all appetite—was so weak and enervated I could hardly walk, and had a perfect dread of society. " " The Plantation Bitters have set me all right.

JAMES HEMINWAY, St. Louis, Mo."

" " " The Plantation Bitters have cured me of a derangement of the Kidneys and Urinary Organs, that distressed me for years. They act like a charm.

C. C. MOORE, 284 Broadway, N. Y."

Mrs. O. M. DEVOE, manager of the Union Home School for Soldiers' Children, says she "has given it to the weak and invalid children under her charge, with the most happy and gratifying results." We have received over a hundred reams of such certificates, but no advertisement is so effective as what people themselves say of a good article. Our fortune and our reputation is at stake. The original quality and high character of these goods will be sustained under every and all circumstances. They have already obtained a sale in every town, village, parish and hamlet among civilized nations. Base imitators try to come as near our name and style as they can, and because a good article cannot be sold as low as a poor one, they find some apology from parties who do not care what they sell. Be on your guard. See our private stamp over the cork.

P. H. DRAKE & CO., New York City.

Over a Million Dollars Saved!

Gentleman:—"I had a negro man worth $1,200 who took cold from a bad hurt in the leg, and was useless for over a year. I had used everything I could hear of without benefit, until I tried the Mexican Mustang Liniment.—It soon effected a permanent cure."

J. L. DOWNING.
Montgomery, Ala., June 17, 1859.

"I take pleasure in recommending the Mexican Mustang Liniment as a valuable and indispensible article for Sprains, Sores, Scratches or Galls on Horses. Our men all say it acts like magic."

J. W. HEWITT,
Foreman for America, Wells, Fargo's and Harnden's Express

"The Sprain of my daughters ankle, occasioned while skating last winter, was entirely cured in one week, after she commenced using your celebrated Mustang Liniment.

ED. PEELY."

Gloucester, Mass., Aug 1, 1865.

It is an admitted fact that the Mexican Mustang Liniment performs more cures in shorter time, on man and beast, than any article ever discovered. Families, livery-men and farmers should always have it on hand. Quick and sure it certainly is. All genuine is wrapped in steel-plate engravings, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook Chemist, and the private U. S. stamp of Demas Barnes & Co over the top.

An effort has been made to counterfeit it with a cheap stone plate label. Look closely!

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

Who would not be beautiful? Who would not add to their beauty? What gives that marble purity and distingue appearance we observe upon the stage, and in the city belle? It is no longer a secret. They use Hagan's Magnolia Balm. Its continued use removes tan, freckles, pimples and roughness, from the face and hands, and leaves the complexion smooth, transparent, blooming and ravishing. Unlike many cosmetics, it contains no material injurious to the skin. Any Druggists will order it for you, if not on hand, at 50 cts. per bottle.

W. E. HAGAN, Troy, N. Y., Chemist.

Wholesale Agents, N. Y.

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

Helmstreet's inimitable Hair Coloring is not a dye. All instantaneous dyes are composed of lunar caustic, and more or less destroy the vitality and beauty of the hair. This is the original Hair Coloring, and has been growing in favor over twenty years. It restores gray hair to its original color by gradual absorption, in a most remarkable manner. It is also a beautiful hair dressing. Sold in two sizes—50 cents and $1—by all dealers.

C. HELMSTREET, Chemist.

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER—for Indigestion, Nausea, Heart-burn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, Flatulency, &c., where a warming stimulant is required. Its careful preparation and entire purity makes it a safe and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cts. per bottle. Ask for "Lyon's" Pure Extract. Take no other.

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

It is a most delightful Hair Dressing.
It eradicates scurf and dandruff.
It keeps the hair rich, soft and glossy.
It prevents hair turning gray and falling off.
It restores hair upon prematurely bald heads.
This is just what Lyon's Kathairon will do. It is pretty—it is cheap—durable. It is literally sold by the car-load, and yet its almost increasing, until there is hardly a country store that does not keep it, or a family that does not use it.

FINKLE & LYON

SEWING MACHINE CO.

OFFICE 534 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

GUARANTEE—After a fair trial, if any purchaser does not regard the Finkle & Lyon Sewing Machine as superior to any machine in market, he can return it and have his money. It has taken many of the highest prizes.—is less complicated than any other first class machine,—does a wider range of work without changing,—requires no taking apart to clean or oil, and no "lessons" to set needle, regulate tension, or operate machine.

N. B. Any Clergyman sending us two orders for Machines, shall receive one for himself as a present. The same proposition is extended to Profession and Teachers.

We have now completed our New Manufactory at a cost of some $200,000, including New Patents and important Improvements; and the object of the above proposition is to secure the immediate introduction of our improved machine into every town in the United States without incurring the great expense of a travelling agent.

This proposition cannot avail in towns occupied by our own agents.

Please send for descriptive Catalogue, wit samples of sewing.

BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY

IN CANADA.

The following testimony from a well known and highly respected Merchant of Prescott, is corroborative of the general approval given to Dr. WISTAN'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY:

PRESCOTT, C. W., Dec. 8th, 1859.

Messrs. S. W. Fowle & Co., Boston.

Gentlemen:—

Being solicited by your Travelling Agent, for an expression of opinion of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, I with pleasure assert that it is, in my belief, the best remedy before the public for coughs and pulmonary complaints.

Having tested the article with myself and family, in case of severe coughs and colds, for years, with uniform and unexceptionable success, I unhesitatingly recommend it, with full confidence in its merits.

Yours truly,

ALFRED HOOKER.

Poetry.

Lines on seeing a picture of John Knox preaching in the old Baronial Tower at Galston, Ayreshire Scotland.

For the Examiner.

The owl may flap his sullen wing,
And all his tune his sorrows sing,
Around thy feudal walls;
The winds upon their trackless way—
Heaven's wild aerial minstrels, play
Amid thy ruined halls.

Rude fragments of a former age—
A breath on history's fleeting page—
Thy day of glory's gone;
Where the bard's strains were proud and high,
Where valor knelt 'neath beauty's eye,—
Now tenantless and lone.

Along thy battlements the tread
Of mail-clad men to battle wed—
The soldier and the slave—
When life was chivalrous and brief
The worthless vassal of a Chief,
Who held it for the grave.

But with the tide of change, there came
Another sound, another name,
That made even Monarchs bow:
No Soldier's steel begirt his breast,
No waving plume, or helmed crest,
Was on his fearless brow.

The burning eloquence that rolled,
Like thunder on the mountain wold,
In mercy's hallowed home,
Awoke strange echoes as it rung,
Where nought but deeds of blood were sung,
Beneath thy time-worn dome.

The stormy periods of the past,
The trumpet's voice, the clarion's blast,
Thy proud baronial power,
Thy thousand flashing sheathless swords
Are nothing, when a Knox's words
Have hallowed thee, lone tower.

Literature.

A Year After Marriage.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

(Concluded.)

'Does Mr. Lee live here?' asked a loud, rough voice.

'He does.'

'Is he at home?'

'Yes, sir. Walk in.'

In a moment or two, a stout, firm-built man, with heavy shoes, a large whip in his hand, and other indications of his being a wagoner, entered the parlor.

'My name is Lee,' Harvey said, rising to his feet and becoming instantly agitated as he did whenever asked for by a stranger.

'Then I wish to speak to you,' the man said, seating himself, and drawing from his pocket a crumpled piece of newspaper, which contained the notice of Fanny's disappearance. He then stated that having accidentally met with the paragraph in an old file of city papers which he was looking over at the tavern, it reminded him of a singular circumstance that had occurred to him some two or three months before.

'I was driving my wagon along, near B——, that lies some forty or fifty miles away from here, as you know, on the—— road,' he went on to say—'when I saw standing in the road before me, on the edge of a thick woods, a young-looking woman, with her clothes a good deal soiled, and her whole appearance showing that she was fatigued from long walking. There was a wild, troubled look about her young, beautiful face, that touched my feelings. She remained standing, and looking intently at me, until my horses were close upon her, without making the slightest effort to move. I, of course, seeing this, reined up, and then getting out of my saddle, was going up to her, when, with her eyes fixed on mine, she moved off to the side of the road. I spoke to her, but she made me no answer. I then went toward her more quickly, when she turned and ran off into the woods at full speed and was soon out of sight. I could not leave my wagon to follow after her, as one of my horses was wild and restless, and had, already, during the day, caused the whole team to run off. I have often thought of it, since, and always with a feeling of concern for the beautiful young creature, evidently out of her mind.—When I saw this paragraph, it recalled the circumstance again and seemed to afford some clue to the mystery. On making enquiry, I was directed to you as the person alluded to.'

Although the story of the wagoner was a welcome one, as creating a new hope of finding Fanny, yet it came with a shock upon his feelings, for it represented her to be in a state of derangement, and a wanderer away from human habitations.

After the minutest inquiries as to her appearance and dress, both Mrs. Woodman and Lee were satisfied that the female he had seen, was Fanny. Thirty minutes afterwards, a horseman might have been seen leaving the city, by the way of Market street, mounted upon a strong, fleet animal, that moved, with apparent ease to himself, at a pace covering at least ten miles per hour.

CHAPTER XIII.

The scene of our story returns once more to the quiet little spot, where dwelt the simple-minded pastor and his pure-hearted wife. Of them it truly might be said—

'The day glides swiftly o'er their heads,
Made up of innocence and love;
And soft and silent as the shades,
Their nightly minutes gently move.'

No vain regrets for duties unperformed, or unsatisfied longings after the goods of life unpossessed, kept sleep from their eyelids a moment, or disturbed the even tenor of their thoughts through the day.

Nearly three months have passed, since the wandering stranger found with them a shelter and a home. A great change has taken place in her since her sojourn with Mr and Mrs. Leonard. The silent influence of the latter, as she daily moved through the round of duties as a wife and mother, but especially as a wife, had been all-powerful in modifying and correcting some things hidden in her own thoughts.

But another change had taken place.—Another stranger had been added to the inmates of that humble dwelling. A babe had been born and now slept in sweet, unconscious innocence upon the breast of Grace, whose affections were drawn out and absorbed as they had never been before.

The day had declined until the sun was just resting upon the western range of high hills that bounded the valley, or lowlands, where most of Mr. Leonard's simple-hearted parishioners resided. Five weeks had passed since the birth of her babe, and Grace, fully restored to health, was sitting with it upon her lap and gazing down upon its sweet young face. Although Mrs. Leonard was also holding her own babe, yet both were silent, for Grace had seemed less inclined to converse than usual. Indeed, ever since the birth of her child, that she appeared to love with intense affection, she had seemed much more absorbed in her own thoughts, and much oftner disposed to weep than before.

As the two young mothers sat thus, Mr. Leonard came in, with his usual cheerful smile, and going up to his wife, stooped down and kissed his babe, and then left the same token of affection upon the cheek of his gentle partner.

Grace noticed it, and, in spite of herself, a tear stole out and fell upon to forehead of her child. A sudden fit of weeping followed, that she struggled in vain to suppress. After its force had become spent, and she was able to rally her feelings, she perceived, as had often been the case before, that she was taxing the hearts of her kind friends beyond what was right. A sudden resolution, while in this state of mind, determined her to speak to them more freely than she had ever done before.

'Forgive me,' she said, as soon as she could trust her voice in utterance, 'the pain I have given you. I feel conscious that I have no right to throw a shadow over your hearts, and I have resolved that I will do so no longer. Ever since this dear babe has blessed my sight, a better feeling than that which prompted me in a sudden fit of passion, to leave my home, has been gaining strength in my bosom. Bitterly, indeed, have I regretted that step; but until now, pride, stubborn pride, has kept me firm in my resolutions not to go back, let the consequences to myself be what they might. Now, the whole current of my thoughts and affections is changed. I feel that I have deeply wronged a husband who loved me tenderly—you start and look surprised.—But it is as I say. It is one year, this very morning, since I was the happiest of brides. Quickly past the first two or three months of our married life, my husband seeming to have no thought but to make me happy. I am not sure that I was as considerate of him. I am not sure, that I did not expect him to regard my tastes and my wishes, while I never dreamed of consulting his feelings or deferring to his preferences.—After the first few months he became changed, and no longer yielded everything to me. Unconscious of the selfish part I had been acting, I thought him harsh and arbitrary, and silently charged him with a desire to domineer over me. From childhood I had been a rebel against all mere dictation, and as a woman and a wife, I was unchanged. His refusal to be ruled by his wife—that is calling it by its right name—I misconstrued into a wish on his part to lord it over me and I would not submit. Things went on in this way, the causes of discontent increasing every day, until an open struggle for the supremacy took place. Neither of us would yield. He declared his course, and I declared mine in direct opposition. Matters grew worse, and ended by a hasty assumption of authority on his part, and a still more hasty declaration on mine, that I would leave him rather than submit to his arbitrary rule. This occurred in the evening. After an angry discussion, I retired to my chamber, and he remained below. I sat up all night, a prey to the most distressing thoughts. But pride was strong, and I wrote bitter things against my husband. Towards day, I penned a letter to him.—This touched my feelings a good deal, and I could not restrain the tears, many of which fell upon the page I had written. At daylight, with about two hundred dollars in my purse, and a small light bundle containing a change of dress, I came softly down stairs. I felt anxious to know if my husband was still in the parlor, and how he had passed the night. Pausing near the door, I heard his loud breathing, and knew that he was asleep. Then I went gently, and perceiving that he lay upon the sofa, drew aside the curtain so as to let the light fall upon him, that I might take a last look, a single glance at his placid, sleeping face came near destroying my well-formed resolution.—Pride came instantly to my aid, and I turned hastily away and left the house.'

'Dreadful!' ejaculated Mrs. Leonard, almost involuntarily.

'I acknowledge that act to have been a wicked one,' the narrator resumed. 'But I was acting from an evil and not a good principle. Once beyond my husband's door—the first step taken—I resolved not to go back, for that would be to acknowledge myself vanquished, and voluntarily to sink into the condition of a mere female slave—so I reasoned, falsely. Alone and on foot, undecided where to go, and unacquainted with the country, but urged on by blind passion, I left the city by the nearest avenue to the place from which I started. I had been only a few miles on my way, when, on looking back, I saw a carriage coming at a rapid rate, the head of a man every now and then thrust out of the window, as if eagerly looking out for some object in advance. I imagined the head to be that of my husband; and so, when the carriage was concealed from me by an intervening hill, I left the road, and buried myself in the woods.

'It really proved to be my husband in pursuit of me, for at the point where I left the road, the carriage stopped. I saw this, from a distance, and saw my husband enter the woods on the side of the road opposite, and the driver on the side of the road next to me. Then I ran still deeper into the forest, and concealed myself amid a thick undergrowth of bushes. But the driver found me out and was going to take me to the carriage by main force, with when, fifty dollars, I bribed him to let me go free.—After my husband, no doubt sadly disappointed, gave up the search, suddenly, it seemed to me, I returned to the road, and walked on for about ten miles, when I waited for the arrival of the stage from Philadelphia; by means of which I had myself conveyed within a few miles of this place. From over-excitement, and distress of mind, (for, notwithstanding my stubborn pride, I was deeply distressed at parting with my husband, whom I really loved, deeply and tenderly) until I found myself under your sheltering roof. This is my brief story.—I felt humbled before I commenced speaking—the review has humbled me more.—To-night I am resolved to write to my husband—confess my fault, and beg to be forgiven."

'Do, by all means!" was the instant reply of Mrs. Leonard. 'How wretched as I have made myself. Still, I trust, if ever again united, the lessons I have learned from your silent example, will enable me to more than compensate him for this brief season of misery. You have taught me, truly, a wife's position and a wife's province."

So interested was the one in speaking, and the others in listening, that none of them had observed the entrance of a stranger. As Grace, or rather Mrs. Lee, finished her last sentence, stooped down to lay her babe in the cradle. Rising in a moment after, her eye caught a glimpse of the stranger, which caused her to start and turn quickly toward him. A wild scream of joy instantly followed this moment—as she darted forward and flung herself into his arms, exclaiming as she did so—

'O, my husband! My dear, dear husband!'

For nearly a minute she reclined almost motionless in his arms, then slowly disengaging herself, she looked up earnestly into his face, her eyes swimming in tears, murmuring as she did so, in a low, beseeching voice—

'Harvey—dear Harvey! will you—can you forgive me?'

'Let us forget the past, Fanny, and only think of it as a troubled dream. The present is ours, and in it we may be happy. I forgive you, as I trust you will forgive me. We have been equally to blame,' was his reply.

For a little while Fanny continued looking up into her husband's face, as if she could never tire of reading its expression. Then suddenly recollecting herself, she drew him quickly to where the cradle containing her little treasure stood, and lifting the sleeping babe tenderly, placed it in his arms, saying as she did so—

'It is yours, Harvey, and mine.'

Tears fell from manly eyes, 'unused to weep,' as Harvey Lee clasped the infant to his breast, and kissed it over and over again, with an ecstacy of delight such as he had never known.

Then followed his presentation to Mr. and Mrs. Leonard, whose pleasure was only exceeded by that of the reunited husband and wife. Their interest in Grace, or Mrs. Fanny Lee, had increased, daily, since she had been an inmate of their quiet household, for they saw, and felt, notwithstanding the painful mystery that surrounded her, that she was pure-minded and affectionate—and that all this misery was consequent upon some misconception, hasty step, or act of tyranny or persecution.—The happy termination of the mystery gave them unfeigned delight.

On the next morning, after having in vain urged upon these kind friends the acceptance of a liberal compensation for their trouble, Fanny and her husband parted from them, and commenced their journey home where they arrived to the delight of Mrs. Woodman, and other warm, true friends, but few of whom, however, were let into the real secret of Fanny's singular conduct. It was generally supposed to have resulted from a fit of temporary mental derangement. And this conclusion was not very far from a true one.

Thus passed the first year of their married life, affording a lesson, whose salutary teachings were not soon forgotten. From that time, no misconceptions have taken place. Under circumstances of pain and trial, that open the mind, hitherto closed by selfishness and pride, to true perceptions of right, they had learned to regard justly the position borne by married partners to each other.

The first painful year of their union needs not to be recalled in order to prompt a mutual forbearance. Its salutary teachings wrought such a change in them, that they seemed not to themselves the same individuals, struggling against barriers to happiness of their own creation. Each, now, is emulous of kind offices, and each finds a far sweeter delight in making the other happy than was felt in the gratification of selfishness and pride that struggled for supremacy.

WORDS.—Beware of impure words.—Filthy conversation is a fruitful means of corrupting. It is a channel by which the impurities of the heart may be communicated to another. And we know who has said, "Evil communications corrupt good manners." Words are an index to the state of the heart. Hence says Christ, "By thy words shalt thou be condemned, and for every idle word men shall speak, they shall give an account in the day of judgment." There are those whose conversation is filthy and disgusting. Parents should guard their children from such. They should themselves avoid every indelicate expression, and check the first appearance of any such thing in their children. Avoid foolish talking and jesting. Children, let your words be pure.

THE NUTRIMENT OF BEER.—People who drink their ale and beer are very fond of telling how much nutriment they derive from them! Because they are manufactured from grain, many have the idea that the concentrated virtues of the grain are in the drinks. This is an entire fallacy.—Prof. Liebig, one of the most eminent chemists of the world, assures us that 1,400 quarts of the best Bavaria beer contains exactly the nourishment of a two and half pound loaf of bread! This beer is very similar to the famous English Allsop's and our more popular American beer. The fact is, the nutritious portion of the grain is rotten before the beer can be made; and if the fermentation of the beer has been complete, Prof. Lyon Playfair declares that no nourishment whatever remains in fermented liquor; and, as the English Alliance News says, no chemist now disputes these assertions; for except in flavor and the amount of alcohol, the chemical composition of all kinds of beer is alike, and brewers must laugh to hear doctors advertising porter as more nourishing than beer, when porter is nothing but beer colored by burnt malt and often, when beer goes wrong in the making and is unsaleable as beer, it is converted into fine porter, the mere coloring covering many defects!—Nation.

THE ART OF BEING POLITE.—First and foremost, don't try to be polite! If you keep overwhelming your guests with ostentatious entreaties to make themselves at home, they will very soon begin to wish they were there. Let them find out that you are happy to see them by your actions rather than your words. Always remember to let bashful people alone at first. It is the only way to set them at ease. Trying to draw them out has sometimes the contrary effect of driving them out—of the house. Leading the conversation is a dangerous experiment. Better follow in its wake, and if you wish to endear yourself to talkers, learn to listen well. Never make a fuss about anything, never talk about yourself, and always preserve your composure, no matter what solecism or blunder others may commit. Remember that it is a very foolish proceeding to lament that you cannot offer to your guest a better house, or furniture, or viands. It is fair to presume that the visit is to you and not to these surroundings. Give people a pleasant impression of themselves, and they will be sure to go away with a pleasant impression of your qualities. On just such slender wheels as these the whole fabric of society turns; it is your business, then, to keep them in revolving order.

HAVELOCK ON DRUNKENNESS IN THE ARMY.—In his Narrative of the War in Affghanistan, he tells us that "when Ghuznee was stormed, the Affghans were every where spared when they ceased to fight, and it is a moral triumph exceeding in value the praise of the martial achievement of the troops, that in a fortress captured by assault not the slightest insult was offered to one of the females found within the walls of the city. This forbearance, and these substantive proofs of the excellence of our discipline reflect more credit on officers and men than the indisputable skill and valor displayed in the operation, but let me not be accused of fostering in unfairly a favourite topic (temperance), or attempting to detract from the merit of the troops, when I remark in how great a degree the self-denial, mercy, and generosity of the hour may be attributed to the fact of the European soldier having no spirit ration since the 8th of July, and having found no intoxicating liquor among the plunder of Guznee. No candid man of any military experience will deny that the character of the scene in the fortress would have been far different if the soldiers had entered the town primed with arrack, or if spirituous liquors had been found in the Affghan depots, as at Badajoz. Since it has been proved the troops can make forced marches of forty miles a day and storm a fortress in twenty-five minutes without the aid of rum, behaving, after success, with a forbearance and humanity unparalleled in history, let it not be henceforth argued that distilled spirits are an indispensable portion of a soldier's ration."

A SERMON TO A PREACHER.—Never shall I forget the remark of a learned legal friend, who was at one time somewhat skeptical in his views. Said he to me: 'Did I believe as you do, that the masses of our race are perishing in sin, I could have no rest. I would fly to tell them of salvation. I would labor day and night.—I would speak with all the pathos I could summon. I'd warn, and expostulate, and entreat my fellow men to turn to unto Christ, and receive salvation at his hands. I am astonished at the manner in which the majority of you ministers tell your message. Why, you do not act as if you believed your own words. You have not the earnestness in preaching that we lawyers have in pleading. If we were as tame as you are, we would never carry a single suit.'

A decade of years has passed away since that remark was made. I bless God it was addressed to me. It put a fire into my bones which I hoped will burn as long as I live. God preached a stirring sermon to me that day by the mouth of that infidel lawyer.—[P. Stryker.

Advice to Medical men—Never doctor your wine. You will find no one patient enough to bear it.

Why is a retired circus clown like a flatterer? Because he is a sick-of-antic (sycophantic) fellow.

S. Crowley.—Your handwrighting is abominable. "My deer sur," is not the right way to begin a letter.

Why is drinking liquor like cultivating the most common of all vegetation? Because it is a potatory business.

Why does Christmas resemble a coin of small value? Because we can spend it without feeling any poorer.

When does a cow change place with her keeper? When she bellows—for then she is a cow heard (cowherd).

TOMATO TRAINING.

We have given several plans for training the tomato, by the use of trellises, surrounding the plant by a frame of sticks and hoops, and the French method of growing to a single stem. The following is a description of a method of training that we have seen practiced with good results:—Tomatoes may be trained up to a wall or fence, or any out building having a proper aspect for their ripening, if such positions are not required for such purposes. I trained them during last season to fifteen feet in height, on the southern side of the barn, and they had an ornamental appearance and were much admired. I planted them at about four feet apart, and from time to time selected enough leaders to cover the entire available space, training them at about nine inches apart.—The soil was rich and they grew rapidly, produced abundantly, were well flavored and always clean. In training them, cut or pinch off all weak or useless laterals, bearing in mind to leave enough of those having on a sufficiency of fruit, pinching off all points near the fruit except those required for leaders. The fruit when it is beginning to ripen, may be exposed by cutting off such foliage as would be likely to shade it. The training requires to be attended to at least once a week, otherwise they quickly get into a state of disorder, and proper success is not attainable. It is astonishing how large a space of them may be regulated by one man, if not too long neglected. The trouble is no more than would be required to support them in any other way. Those who adopt this method will, I am pretty sure, be well satisfied with the result. My way of fastening them has been with staples which I make quickly out of common wire with a pair of pliers, a hammer and a stone to sharpen them on.—Those who are not willing to take all this trouble in training tomatoes, will find it a good plan to lay bits of brushwood on the ground for the stalks to rest upon, in order that the fruit may be kept clean and ripened evenly.

THE KITCHEN GARDEN.—Most people in this country have a time of "making garden," and then let the thing take its chances, and we often see a better crop of weeds than of anything else. In a well kept garden a weed is never allowed to get larger than can be killed by a rake. Much of the tillage may be done with a good steel rake frequently applied. Still the hoe must be used, and in large gardens the horse cultivator kept moving between the rows. The time to perform these operations is just before the ground needs weeding. By thus working frequently early in the season, all the seeds of weeds that are near the surface are made to germinate, and the young plants are destroyed. Those who have had their early plantings destroyed by cold rains, or who have neglected to sow many things they would like to have, should not let the lateness of the season deter them. There are but few things that will not make a good crop if planted early in June. Things that are soon over may have their duration much prolonged by sowing again.

We clip the following from the W[illegible] Telegraph, published in St. John, N. B., and purporting to be the Fenian oath. That paper says:—

"It is not until the candidate for Fenian honors has taken this black profanity and made way for another, that he perceives what was in store for him. Has he flinched. A circle of men with extended arms and steel weapons in their hands stand round with the bristling points of these within an inch of his throat: it is then too late to retract. The circumstances under which this oath came out were partly these. A man had been decoyed into joining these scoundrels and taking this oath. He was appointed to some secretaryship, but his conscience was no longer easy. Tormented by the awful impositions of the oath and in terror of his life, he sought the advice of one who was ready to give it and ready to take the consequences. He had contrived to conceal short-hand notes of many things, and a copy of this oath. He was suspected, and knocked down in the street. By the kind aid of him whose advice he sought, he was sent off clandestinely to England, and copies of the oath and the other papers, with revelations and implications of the most astounding nature, which I will not now hint at because circumstances have deprived them of their probability of success. Because those Feenians have taken the most sacred land mark of the faith they possess, it does not imply that we who shew them thus up are so rash as to identify them with that faith, or that faith with them.

THE OATH.

I, B. B.—Swear by the Almighty God—by all in Heaven and upon Earth—by this Blessed and Holy Prayer Book of my Holy Church—by the Blessed and Holy Virgin Mary, Mother of God—by her sorrowings and groanings at the foot of the Cross—by her tears and wailings—by the Holy St. Peter and St. Paul—by the glorious Apostle of Ireland, St. Patrick—by the blessed and adorable Host—by the blessed Rosary and Holy Beads—by our blessed and Holy Church—and by the Holy Martyrs of our Church in all ages—and by our holy Irish National Martyrs—to fight upon Irish soil for the independence of Ireland—to fight until Edie wading in fields of the red gore of the Saxon tyrants and murderers for our glorious cause of Irish Nationality; and, if spared, to fight till there is not a single vestige—not a track—not a foot print, left to tell that the holy soil of Ireland was trodden by the Saxon robbers and murderers. And, moreover, when these English Protestants, robbers and brutes in Ireland shall all be murdered or driven into the sea, like the swine Jesus Christ caused to be drowned—we shall then embark for and take England, and root out every vestige of the accursed breed of the heretic adulterer and murderer, Henry the Eighth, and possess ourselves of the treasures of the beast that has so long kept our beloved "Isle of Saints," old Ireland, in chains of bondage and drove us from her genial shores—exiled us to foreign lands; and we shall wade in the blood of all Orangemen, and all heretics who do not join us and become one of ourselves. Scotland, too, having given aid and succor to the beast, we shall leave her too in her gore, and shall not give up the conquest until we have our Holy Father complete ruler over the British Isles, as he was before the Reformation. To all these singly and collectively I swear to fulfil as before mentioned; with my eyes blinded, not knowing who to me administered this oath. So help me God.

Our Trade with the Lower Provinces.

From letters of Mr. Brydges in regard to trade with the Lower Provinces, we gather some useful information. It would appear that all that is wanted to create a considerable trade with the Lower Provinces, in enterprize to divert it from its present channel through the United States.

He begins by asserting the necessity for railway communication with these provinces and he declares that so satisfied is he that a trade can be developed to the principle cities of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward's Island, that he made arrangements with existing lines of steamers to carry traffic from all points on the line of Grand Trunk Railway to those places. Mr. Brydges further remarks that because of these provinces being unable to procure supplies at all seasons, they were forced to look up large capitals in produce, for long periods, which communication would set free for other purposes. Besides, the trade of Canada will be more direct with the provinces by Rail or by the River routes, than through the United States.

From his letter we learn that there is 25cts duty on American shipments, while that from Canada enters free in New Brunswick, in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward's Island. There is also duty in favor of Canada of 25 cents.

The importations of flour according to the latest returns are

	Bbls.
In New Brunswick	256,096
Nova Scotia	355,358
" "	26,913
Prince E. Island	32 891
Newfoundland	202,718
Making a total of	874,816.

This is more than the average importations of flour into the United States during the existence of the Reciprocity Treaty.

Of the importations of flour into New Brunswick, the great bulk has for some years back been from the United States; although, even before the abrogation of the Reciprocity Treaty, the quantity sent from Canada has been annually increasing. Thus in the year 1863 St John received from Canada by way of Portland 9000 parrels; in 1864, 15,609 barrels; whilst during the last twelve months the quantity has increased to 47 000 barrels.

If this has been the case before the abrogation of the Reciprocity Treaty, it follows, as a matter about which there can be little dispute, that the circumstances which now exist will make it certain that nearly the whole supply will in future be drawn from Canada.

In regard to Nova Scotia, the importations by the last returns which have been published in that Province, namely, for the year ending 30th September, 1865, show the following result:

	Bbls.
From Canada	58,233
New Brunswick	10,482
Prince Edward Island	372
Newfoundland	658
United States	312,377
Great Britain	118
Other places	67

Of the importations from Canada the largest amounts have been to Halifax and Pictou, the quantities having been respectively —To Halifax, 26,018 and to Pictou 25,479. From the United States, the importations have been, to a very large extent, into the Port of Halifax,—they having amounted to 172,192 barrels. The next largest place of importation is Yarmouth, into which place the importations were 13,714 barrels. The next largest are Cornwallis and Windsor, they each having imported 9000 barrels.

In Prince Edward's Island the importations, according to the last published returns, have been

	Bbls.
From Canada	1 818
Nova Scotia	2,353
New Brunswick	323
United States	27,227
Total	32,801

In Newfoundland, of the total importations of 202,718 barrels, there were from Canada 25,835, from Nova Scotia 3,382 and from the United States 172,145. The bulk of the importations into Newfoundland are taken into St. John's, although some portions find their way to the different fishing points along the coast in the same way as is the case in Nova Scotia.

As regards New Brunswick, the importations of butter and cheese amounted, by the last public returns, to 500,128 lbs., of the total value of $105,725. Of this, 309,846 lbs. were purchased in the United States.—Of meats and hams, cured and salted, New Brunswick imported 2,059,131 lbs., of a total value of $157,183, of which 1,999,845 lbs. were imported from the United States. Of boots and shoes, of various kinds, New Brunswick imported to a total value of $80,475, of which $66,489 came from the United States. Of leather of various kinds, she imported to the value of $47,183, of which the United States supplied $42,650. Of lard, New Brunswick imported 93,165 lbs., of which 78,603 lbs. were sent from the United States. Of refined sugar, the United States supplied New Brunswick with 150,995 lbs.; of unrefined sugar, 430,815 lbs. The greatest portion, of course, of the unrefined sugar was either supplied direct from the West Indies or from the same place through Nova Scotia. Of the article of tea, New Brunswick imported 1,668,662 lbs., of which 485,978 lbs were sent from the United States; nearly the whole of the remainder being imported from Great Britain.

It may be interesting to give some similar facts in regard to the trade of Nova Scotia. It seems from its returns that the total importations of beef, pork and hams (cured and salted) amount to about 13,000 barrels per annum, of a total value of $212,707; of this 10,695 barrels were imported from the United States, and only 77 from Canada. Of tea the total importations into Nova Scotia were 1,546,065 lbs., of a value of $515,890, of which the United States supplied 175,105 lbs. Great Britain of course supplied the great bulk of the remainder. Of tobacco in leaf the total importations into Nova Scotia were 507,989 lbs., of which the United States supplied 58,856 lbs. Of manufactured tobacco the importations were 317,029 lbs., of which the United States supplied 244,532 lbs. The importations of raw and refined sugar from the United States into Nova Scotia appear to be but a very small proportion of the whole.

The exportations of raw sugar from Nova Scotia are very considerable, amounting in the aggregate to nearly ten millions of lbs., of which upwards of a quarter appears to be sent from Halifax to Canada.

In regard to Newfoundland, in addition to flour, they imported in the year 1864, the last return able to be obtained, 26,157 bbls. of pork, of which 23,472 were sent from the United States, and 1,233 from Canada.—They imported of beef 2,417 barrels, of which 1,999 were from the United States.—Of butter the importations were 16,436 cwt., of which Nova Scotia supplied 4 192 cwt., Canada 2,466 cwt., and the United States 7,454 cwt. Of leather ware the total importations were to the value of $61,936. Of tea 461,830 lbs., and of tobacco 291,750 lbs.

European.

News from Europe has arrived but not full enough to satisfy the public desire. The Ministry had been defeated on the Reform Bill, but it was not known what course they would adopt until the Queen should return from Balmoral. A dissolution or resignation was considered inevitable, but which was not even hinted at.

The Atlantic cable is again ready, and the Great Eastern was to leave Sheerness on the 30th ult. The news from the continent absorbs the attention of all just now. Latest news brings no intelligence of any serious engagements between the belligerents.—Prussia is in the field with a large army.—Austria is preparing to oppose with all earnestness. Victor Emmanuel is moving his army. Already the Italians have crossed the Mincio. Events are fast coming to a crisis, and ere long terrible slaughter and devastation may be chronicled; already Prussia is reported to be very active, and moving her troops with rapidity. Prussian troops have entered Saxony, Hanover and Hesse, and the third son of the Elector of Hesse had been taken prisoner, and one of the accounts say the Elector of Hesse and his minister also. Next arrivals will bring stirring news from Europe.

Imprudent Action of the County Council.

Very seldom has it fallen to our lot to find fault with the action of the County Council, nor do we remember a single instance heretofore of exceeding the bounds of discussion in that august assembly.

At its last session, however, a resolution was passed, referring to certain words that were dropped in parliamentary discussion anent the Volunteer system. It is outside the limits of County Council business to interfere, by resolution or otherwise, in political discussion going on anywhere; and the precedent now set might hereafter lead to discussion in the Council Chamber of a very unpleasant nature. But independent of this the business of the Council is to attend to Municipal matters, not to the political views of members of parliament, and it certainly would be more prudent to call a public meeting to express the views of the people on any important question, as the views of the Council can be worth nothing more than the views of the same number of intelligent men who may not be members, since those members were not chosen on political grounds, but on merely their fitness to discharge duties referring to Municipal matters. It was uncalled for too, as the Council had already expressed itself on the subject of the Volunteer's pay. No one, for a moment, imagines that the Volunteers received too much—on the contrary very many think, and justly too, that they have been but poorly paid yet, and the Council by granting each non-commissioned officer and private the sum of $10, practically declared that they considered their pay too little, and hence what necessity for the resolution. Several of the members allowed the matter to pass merely to prevent discussion on the matter.

The Editor of the Review must needs make a thrust at Col. Haultain anent this matter. This he has not failed to do on every possible and uncalled for occasion; even going so far as to misrepresent the member for this County. It is not true that Col. Haultain "seems to allow no opportunity to pass without despraging the whole force." The fact is he never at any time has spoken a word despragingly of the Volunteers either in parliament or out of it; but on the contrary has very often praised them, as he did in discussing the address from the throne; nor can a single word be found in his speech or remarks as reported even in the Review, reflecting on the Volunteers in any way whatever. It is true that Col. Haultain considers the present militia system defective, and would do all in his power to see it amended so as to meet the exigencies in which we are and may be placed. It is also true that he desires to see a system that will properly drill and equip all the militia, and prepare them for the defence of our country. And it is also true that he desires to see the whole force placed on an equal basis as regards pay and every thing else. But will the Editor of the Review point out a sentence, nay a word, in which he speaks despragingly of the Volunteers. It is not honest to twist his language or fly off at tangents, to fasten on him the opprobrium of belittling the Volunteers, when it is the militia system as now existing with which he finds fault, and which he wishes amended. We all know the system is defective, and who in the house is better able to point to its defects than one who has filled a superior position in the British army. But if Col. Haultain despised the Volunteers, why did he offer his services as a Volunteer, if required? It is well known that he offered his services to get up a field battery here—and again to get up an Infantry Company, and has again and again tendered his services as a Volunteer. This is a sufficient answer to the misrepresentations of the Review, and a careful perusal of his speech will show that it is the system of defence and general cost, not the paltry pay of the Volunteers with which he is at issue.

County Council.

In the Report of proceedings, last week, Thursday got mixed with Tuesday, giving the business on the wrong days. This was owing to getting the proceedings in a very broken order. We find, too, that the motion to relieve the Canadian Land and Emigration Company from paying taxes for Harcourt was lost—not passed as reported.

The remaining business of the Council we give to-day, commencing where we left off on Thursday, the last day of the Council.

The Warden read a statement of the County Solicitor which was filed for future reference.

Moved by Mr. Carnegie, and seconded by Mr. Crover,—That the County Solicitor be requested to prepare a By-law to levy the sum of $218 on the Township of Harvey, being the balance due of amount of re-survey of Harvey.

On motion of Mr. Scott, the yeas and nays were taken. Yeas, 11; Nays, 4.

Moved by Mr. Carnegie, and seconded by Mr. Grover —That the County Solicitor (if he deem it advisable) be requested to prepare a By-law for levying the estimated amount of the cost of the re-survey of Burleigh and Monaghan.

On motion of Mr. Carroll, the yeas and nays were taken. Yeas, 11; Nays, 3.

Moved by Mr. Carnegie, seconded by Mr. Grover,—That the County Solicitor's opinion upon the sale of lands in Harvey, be filed. Carried.

On motion of Mr. Patterson, a By-law to authorize the levying and collecting of county rates and assessments for county purposes was read a first time.

On motion of Mr. Gilmour, a By-law was read a first time, appointing Mr. Grover arbitrator between the Town of Peterborough and the County. The By-law was also read a second time, Mr. Dean in the chair.

On motion of Mr. Grover, the committee on Finance was allowed to report. The report was referred to a committee of the whole council.

A By-law was passed authorizing the payment of various accounts and claims.

On motion of Mr. Pearce, the council went into committee of the whole on second reading of the By-law to levy and collect the county rates for the year.

On motion of Mr. Dean, seconded by Mr. Dunlop,—The Clerk was authorized to get printed notices on the beams of the bridge across the Otonabee river, between the Town and Ashburnham, in accordance with the Statutes, and that he get some person to examine and screw up said bridge, if necessary; also to get some person to prosecute parties driving over bridge contrary to law. The person employed to prosecute to have the whole fine or fines imposed.

On motion of Mr. Peck, seconded by Mr. Pearce,—A By-law to levy a certain sum of money on the Township of Harvey, for balance of cost of re-survey of said Township, was read a first time.

On motion of Mr. Peck, seconded by Mr. Patterson,—The By-law was read a second time in committee of the whole.

Moved by Mr. Peck, seconded by Mr. Grover,—That the By-law to levy and collect the sum of $218 from the Township of Harvey, for the balance of cost of the re-survey of said Township, be read a third time and passed.

Mr. Scott moved in amendment that the By-law do not be read a third time or passed. The amendment was lost by a majority of 10, and the By-law was read a third time and passed.

Moved by Mr. Pearce, seconded by Mr. Gilmour,—That in view of the recent discussion on the floor of Parliament, in reference to the pay of Volunteers, this Council deems it desirable to express their opinion, that, owing to the fact that many of these brave men voluntarily left their homes and their business for the defence of the country, at a time when many of them were earning high wages, we cannot, and do not, regard the paltry pay of 25 cents per day as in the least excessive; and consider it in fact but a poor remuneration for services so cheerfully rendered and at such great personal sacrifice. We cannot fail to express surprise that an opposite view has been expressed on the floor of the House; and we do declare that with such parsimonious views in relation to the payment of our brave volunteers we have no sympathy.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Carroll, and seconded by Grover,—That the Clerk be instructed to select the forms most suitable for the use of magistrates, and get a number of the same printed, and that such forms be supplied gratuitously to magistrates of the county. Lost.

Moved by Mr. Grover, seconded by Mr. Gilmour,—That the By-law to provide for the monies necessary to be raised in connection with the re-survey of Burleigh, be read a third time.—Carried.

This By-law was read a second and third time and passed.

A By-law to provide for the erection of stone monuments in North Monaghan also went through its different readings and was passed.

The committee appointed at last meeting of Council to report on the probable cost of a bridge across Chemong Lake, and also to consult with interested municipalities concerning the same, reported their inability to carry out their instructions, and asked to be allowed to report at next meeting of Council which was granted.

A By-law, also, appointing Mr. Grover arbitrator between the Town and County was read a third time and passed.

Moved by Mr. Peck, seconded by Mr. Pearce, that each Reeve of this County collecting any money for timber on County road allowances, be allowed to spend the same on any County road he thinks fit, and make a return to this Council of the amount so spent.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Grover, seconded by Mr. Carroll, that in view of the fact that this council will not meet again this year, that the thanks of this council be tendered to the Warden for his able and courteous conduct in the chair; and that the sum of fifty dollars be granted him for extra services to this council, and that the Treasurer be authorized to pay the amount.—Carried.

We are pleased to learn that Miss Bidley formerly a pupil of Mrs Kyle's, has obtained a second class certificate, grade B, at the late examination of the Normal school, after attendance for one session. This speaks favorably both for Miss Bidley and her former teacher.

Union School.

The Board met on Tuesday evening. Present, the Chairman, and Messrs. Dumble, Cameron, Gilmour, Helm, Leady, Stevenson, Drs. Poole and McRae.

The minutes of previous meeting were read and confirmed.

A communication from Mr. Griffin was read, giving the three months notice of his resignation. Also from Miss Benson, soliciting an increase of salary. Also from Miss Ridley, asking the use of the primary department rooms, to teach during the holidays.

The Chairman remarked, that as it had been rumoured that Mr. Griffin had left not to return, the Secretary had written to him and received an answer—that if promoted, he would accept it and return.

On motion of Mr. Dumble, the Secretary was directed to give Mr. Griffin notice of his appointment to the place lately held by Mr. Baptie, however the same to be during the approval of the Board.

Mr. Shortleff's engagement having expired. It was agreed to give him notice of his re-appointment, during the pleasure of the Board.

On motion of Mr. Stevenson, the Secretary was directed to prepare a report of monthly attendance, for the last three years.

After some discussion concerning making the Grammar School free, to meet a certain resolution of the County Council. It was agreed on motion of Mr. Cameron, to make the Grammar School free in future.

An account for fixing gateway, was ordered to be paid.

It was agreed to give Miss Ridley, the use of the North Ward School room during vacation, instead of the primary department.

The Principal was directed to take measures to supply Mr. Griffin's place in the third department.

It was also agreed to remove all children in the third Book, from the North Ward School, to the proper departments in the Union School buildings.

ASHBURNHAM COUNCIL.

July 2nd, 1866.

The Council met on Monday evening. Present—the Reeve and Messrs. Sutherland and Clarke.

The minutes of last meeting read and confirmed.

It was moved by Mr. Sutherland, seconded by Mr. Clark,—That the following accounts be paid, viz:—

E. Rafferty and others, for planting trees on street	$15 65
R. D. Rogers, Volunteer's balance of Volunteer account	9 50
Geo. Tanner, chairs for Hall	9 60
John Burnham, rent cricket ground one year	15 00
Grant to P. P. Home	10 00

The Council adjourned, to meet the 1st Monday of August, at 7.30.

Our Local Constitution.

The chief item of interest is the supposed change in representation under the confederation. The Globe's correspondent intimates that the Local Parliament will consist of two Houses in Lower Canada, the Upper to be appointed the Lower House, elected in Lower Canada; but in Upper Canada it is supposed that there will be but one branch of Legislation, presided over by a governor, appointed by the Confederate Government.

Our present representation will be increased by 17 members to be distributed nearly as follows:—

Town of Chatham	1
Town of Guelph	1
Town of Brantford	1
Town of Peterboro'	1
Town of Belleville	1
Town of St. Catherines	1
Toronto University	1
Indian District of Algoma	1
County of Huron	1
County of Bruce	1
County of Perth	1
County of Grey	1
Kent and Lambton (between them)	1
County of Peel	1
York and Simcoe (between them)	1
County of Frontenac	1
County of Renfrew	1

WHERE LIES THE BLAME.

The great talk now is who is to blame for the precipitate action of the volunteers in the late raid, and the rather slow action of the regulars. This cannot yet be satisfactorily answered; but as the Governor General has granted investigation into the action of Col. Booker, at his own solicitation, as soon as the investigation comes to light we may be able to form opinions, one thing is certain we should not be too hasty in attaching blame to any one until the whole is heard.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK FOR JULY.—"Summer Joys" is the title of a beautiful steel engraving. Each group in the plate forms a picture by itself. This is the season when the enjoyments that pictured will be appreciated. The Colored Fashion-plate, containing six figures, speaks for itself. This plate will be prized by the ladies. "Confessed," a fine wood engraving, printed in tint. The juveniles will know how to appreciate this. The next plate is "Boating on the Lake. New Employment for the Ladies." This shows what will be the result of the new fashions of wearing hats, cravats, etc. The latest fashions consist of two Robe dresses from Stewart & Co.; Bonnets; Basque Corsage; Silk Paletot, etc. J. R. Terry, 409 Broadway, New York, furnishes five new hats in the latest style. Among the latest Novelties will be found the following: Hats, Jacket, Corset Cover, Collars, Child's Dress, etc., etc. The Work-Department contains the usual variety of work for the ladies, consisting of Ornamented Parasol, three designs; Useful Basket Bag, two engravings; Letters for Marking, six engravings; Crochet Cape; Stand for Paper Lights; Crochet Border; Fancy Herring-Bone Stitch; Embroidery and Braiding Patterns. The Literary matter for this month will be read with much interest. "Rizpah's Idols," "Life's Contrasts," and "The Daffodils" are excellent. "Dress under Difficulties," by a lady of Georgia, gives an insight of the troubles of southern ladies during the blockade.—This number commences the seventy-third volume of the Lady's Book. There is no falling off in Godey. This is a good time to commence to subscribe. In this volume, from July to December, you get all the fall and winter fashions—cloaks, mantles, furs, bonnets, crochet work, etc.

Communications.

LINDSAY, JUNE 25, 1866.

SIR,—Will you permit me to take up some of your valuable space to correct some errors you were led into last week in regard to the loyalty of Victoria. I do not for a moment think that you would publish anything to hurt or wrong our County knowingly, but I have good reasons for believing that the person (I will not call him a gentleman) who handed you that squib, headed "Ladies, attention," willfully misrepresented the case to you. That bill was not got out by the ladies to shame cowardly young men, but it was got up by two of the Rifle company for sport, and as there was a keen competition between the Rifles and an Infantry company of Capt. Grace's to draw attention to the Rifle company, there was only two of them posted up and only twelve of them printed.—You say Victoria is the only County from which no volunteers went to the front or offered to go. Now to show the veracity of your informant, I will tell you that four companies offered their services from Lindsay, one from Omemee and one from Bobcaygeon, and your informant cannot plead ignorance on this point, for I told him so myself after I stopped him cutting that bill off the post in front of the Advocate office. As to Mr. Cottingham's company been refused, our list was in fully a week before his. He says he has sent it down three times; we have done so too, but a little before him. We were accepted last week, and our arms and clothing will be here this week. This shows whether any offered or not. There was a Rifle company in Lindsay and a good company too; but it was broken up by the melancholy death of Sergt. Brewer, who was shot at target practice. Since that there has been no company in Lindsay, but after this we will be behind no other town in Canada, nor will our County be behind any other County, as we have a company at Oakwood, one at Bobcaygeon, one at Manilla, and one at Little Britain.—none are recognised except the Bobcaygeon company. These with our four town companies I think will do very well for Victoria. Can your informant call us disloyal, or even lukewarm? I think not.

Let him now look to his own County, Peterborough. In Victoria we have no Brennans in jail as a fenian, nor have we an exodus to the States of the young men of our Roman Catholic townships of twenty-five a day, "for fear of the orangemen". Never in Lindsay has Roman Catholics attempted to walk with traitorous flags and refuse to carry the Union Jack, and was this because they were afraid of orangemen? No! but because the Roman Catholics of Victoria, unlike our sister County, are true and loyal subjects of our Queen, and are ready and willing to take the field against the invaders of their country. I trust these truths will set the matter in the proper light with the public; for I am prepared to substantiate all I have said, and I hope for the future we will hear no more about the disloyalty of Victoria until we really deserve to be classed as disloyal. Thanking you for your indulgence,

I remain, yours truly,

VOLUNTEER L. R. C'y.

Fenians Again.

President Roberts is again making speeches and boasting of his power to liberate Ireland, subdue England, and more too; another attack is threatened to be made on this Province.

Parliamentary.

A set of resolutions setting forth the proposed constitution for the Canadas is to be proposed to-day by the Hon. John A. McDonald. A new Militia Law is about being brought forward, also by the same gentleman.

The 12th of July, 1866.

We would call the attention of our readers to the advertisement. A great procession is expected. Cobourg, Port Hope, Cavan, Manvers, &c., &c., &c., will be represented on that day. There are great preparations for it.

Twenty years experience in using Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers have proved them to be the most effectual remedy for coughs, and irritation of the throat, caused by cold, or unusual exertion of the vocal organs; public speakers and singers will find them most beneficial. The entire freedom from all deleterious ingredients renders Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers, or Cough and Voice Lozenges, a safe remedy for the most delicate person, and caused them to be held in high esteem by all who have used them Sold by all medicine dealers at 25 cents per box.

FURTHER BY THE "JURA."

NEW YORK, June 28.

The following is the speech of the Emperor of Austria to the Common Council of Vienna, on the 14th, referred to in the foreign news:—

"I receive this manifestation from the city of Vienna with great satisfaction. I have done everything in my power to preserve the peace and liberty of Germany, but it has been made impossible in all quarters for me to do so. This is the most arduous period I have experienced since my accession to the throne. I now resort to the sword with confidence in God, my good right, my valiant army and the co-operation of my faithful subjects; but I must in especial express my fullest satisfaction with the unanimity and attitude of Vienna, notwithstanding that considerable sacrifices have been already imposed upon the capital by the stoppage of business, and the want of employment for the population. The most exemplary order prevails here in comparison with the other countries, and I cannot sufficiently express my recognition of this fact."

The Berlin correspondent of the London Times says:

The Russian force concentrated in Southern Poland will take up such a position as to eventually be at the disposal of the Czar.

It was positively stated at Copenhagen that Sweden, Norway and Denmark had concluded an offensive and defensive treaty of alliance.

It is stated that the Austrian Minister for Foreign Affairs, withheld the passports of Baron Von Werther, the Prussian Ambassador, until the Prussian Government released Councillor Lesser who was arrested in Holstein.

It was reported that a large Austrian army had been carried suddenly to the Bussian frontier, the Italians having probably given the Austrians reason to fear an attack on Hungary.

It was also rumored that the Italian troops had made a movement in advance on the Mincio.

HANOVER, June 15.

The Prussian forces are marching into Hanover from Hamburg and Minden.

A Royal order has been issued prohibiting all further traffic in the districts of Hamburg Lunenburg and Hopenstorf, thus closing the Northern Hanoverian frontier.

The Prussian proposals for an alliance, in accordance with which Hanover should observe neutrality, has been refused by the King.

Hanover has also positively rejected the principal points of the Prussian proposals for a more closely united confederation, especially those articles of the Prussian project which refer to the military organization and the question of a German fleet.

The Hanover troops were retiring to Gottingen for concentration there with the Austrian Kalik brigade and the Bavarian army.

A GLANCE AT EUROPE.

(From the Philadelphia Press.)

The probability of a war in Europe has directed the attention of the country to the resources, both by land and sea, both of the powers likely to originate the war and the powers which will reasonably become involved in it.

1. The Empire of Austria.

This power of Europe consists of six kingdoms, three principalities, two archduchies, two duchies, three margraviates—the ban of Austria. The kingdoms are Hungary, Bohemia, besides Venice, Dalmatia, Croatia and Sclavonia; the archduchies of Upper Austria—the original foundation of the empire; the duchies of Salzburg, Styria, Carinthia, Bukovina, Upper and Lower Silesia. The margraviates are Moravia, Istria and Servia; the territory of Trieste and the ban of Thermes; besides this, numerous so-called military stations. In all, thirty-five millions of inhabitants, speaking a variety of languages, antagonistic in religion and race, and ever ready for revolt.

The army on foot consisted of 300,000 soldiers until within the last few months, when the second category was called into active service, increasing the army 200,000. A second levy has been ordered, which has not exceeded 140.000 men. In time of war Austria can raise an army of 700,000 or 800,000 men. Almost all the nobility have a rank in the army. The Austrian soldier is distinguished for bravery and powers of endurance, but is utterly lacking in brilliancy and daring. In 1859, in the campaign in Lombardy, the artillery possessed only a few cannon. Now it has made great progress, though it is far from taking rank amongst the best in Europe.

The Hungarian cavalry is the finest in Europe; it has preserved all the historical traditions of its fame. Many a victory has it helped to win for Austria, but Austria has never testified its appreciation of its importance. Austria has never possessed any celebrated generals. The Archduke Charles, the most famous among them, was on every occasion conquered by Napoleon I. To take the field again it has no other generals than those that were beaten at Magenta, Solferino, Palestra and San Martino. Austria cannot send into the field more than three hundred thousand men, being obliged to have two hundred thousand men in the Quadrilateral, between Venice and the frontier of Lombardy, where the army of Italy is encamped. A hundred thousand men are in Hungary. The Austrian navy consists of one hundred and twenty vessels of war, of which seventy only are steamers. In all, one thousand one hundred cannon. The merchant vessels of Austria consist of about ten thousand ships.

2. The kingdom of Prussia.

The population of Prussia is eighteen millions and a half—nearly all united by bonds of race, religion and language. In times of peace the army consists of two hundred thousand men. At the present moment it has four hundred and fifty thousand men under arms, besides a reserve, well drilled and disciplined, called Landwehr. The Prussians have all military instinct—they are brave, sober and indefatigable. The artillery is one of the finest in Europe, with fine cannon and admirable and intelligent officers. The generals are formed in the school of Frederick the Great. One of them was Bucher, the conqueror of Napoleon at Waterloo. Its navy, limited to eighty vessels of war, is in better condition than that of Austria, the four hundred and ten cannon they carry being all of the latest modern models. The merchant vessels are about two thousand in number. Prussia boasts of its right over the Duchies of Holstein, Lauenburg and Schleswig, Austria declining to cede without compensation since 1863.

3. The Kingdom of Denmark.

This small kingdom possesses a population of three millions. In time of peace its army consists of twenty-five thousand men, in time of war it reaches fifty thousand.—The navy of Denmark, though limited to one hundred vessels of war, with only a thousand cannon, is admirable. Its merchant vessels number about six thousand.—The three duchies which belonged to Denmark have remained in the possession of the two powers which occupy them. Austria and Prussia. The duchies are the cause of the war which threatens. The duchies form altogether a population of one million.

4. The Confederation of Germany.

By the treaty of 1815, made by all the European Powers, the German Confederation consisted of forty States. It now contains only thirty-five. Each of these different States has an independent government of its own, but all are united in repelling an invasion on any one of the Confederation, and bound to assist in all quarrels with foreign powers. The legislative power of the Confederation is called a Diet, and is held at Frankfort-on-the-Main, a so-called free city. The States forming the Germanic Confederation include thirteen millions of inhabitants belonging to Austria, fourteen millions to Prussia, and eighteen millions included in four kingdoms, one electorate, seven grand duchies, eight duchies, eight principalities, one landgravate and four cities professing to be republics.

The total population of the Confederation of Germany consists of forty five millions, obliged, by the treaty which binds them, to furnish an army of five hundred and sixty thousand men; Austria and Prussia contributing, of course, in overwhelming numbers. The details are as follows: The portions of Austria belonging to the Confederation are Bohemia Moravia, the Archduchy of Austria, Silesia, Salzburg, Styria, Carinthia, Carniola, the Tyrol, Imli, Trieste (out not the Venetian States), about thirteen millions of people. The Prussian possessions included in the Confederation are Saxony, Silesia, Westphalia, Brandenburg, Pomerania, and the Rhenish provinces, over fourteen millions of people.

A terrible example of retributive justice occurred last week, near Catassauque, Penn., as given by the "Allentown Register:—"A man named Miller, about three weeks ago, made an agreement with some of his companions in vice, to meet him at a certain place every Sunday, when he would administer to them the holy communion, giving them whiskey and crackers. This mock ceremony was performed every Sunday, but the hands which administered the mock emblems in derision, were so mangled by the premature discharge of a blast, last week, as to require amputation. He was also severly burned about the head. After two days of extreme suffering, he went to meet his insulted Creator.'

New York, 25th.

About 12,000 Fenians assembled outside of Jones Wood yesterday, and listened to a long speech from the Chief Organizer, James Stephens. The greeting he received was very enthusiastic. He concluded with the assurance that before the close of the present year the snabursts should be unfurled in Ireland.

The Tribune learns from Mexico, that the French transport which left Vera Cruz on the 6th inst., had on board $5,000,000 which was being sent to France as a part of the balance due from Maximilian to the French Government.

ARRIVAL OF THE CUBA.

WAR NEWS.

Halifax, July 2, 12 o'clock.—A steamer was signalled in the east supposed to be the Cuba with three days later news from Europe.

The Steamer Cuba from Liverpool 28th has arrived, with dates three days later.—No collision of any importance had occurred between the belligerents. The Prussians have entered Austria. Austrians still show signs of great warlike activity.

It is rumored that Bavaria hesitates at present to take an active part in the campaign on the ground that Austria is not ready.

The Pall Mall Gazette says there is a general belief that Austria is resolved on concentrating all her strength, in the effect to secure supremacy in Germany, and after such crossing of swords as will satisfy honor, will surrender Venetia, if the Italians are willing to come to an amicable understanding.

The Prussian troops entered Austrian territory, near Odenaburg, in Upper Silesia, on the night of the 21st.

The movements of Benedek are kept very secret, nothing more than reconnoissances appear to have been made by the Austrians in Upper Silesia.

The Prussians continued to fortify themselves at Dresden.

Embden has surrendered to the Prussians.

Vienna papers assert that the Saxon town of Seitzattan had been destroyed by the Prussians, in consequence of the refusal of the inhabitants to pay war contributions.

The Prussians have taken the Elector of Hesse and his minister of war prisoners, and sent the latter to Fortress Minden.

The Saxon army had succeeded in joining the Austrians.

It is also reported that the Hanoverian troops effected a junction with the Federal army corps.

The force of the federal army around Frankfort amounted to 60,000.

The head-quarters of Prince Alexander are to be transferred to Frankfort.

The Oldenburg minister at the diet was recalled to Mecklenburg, and expected to follow the federal council.

Switzerland has been officially informed that hostilities in Italy commenced on the 22nd.

The Austrians had declared Venice and Trieste in a state of seige.

The Austrian outposts at Apazo, were attacked by Italian volunteers on the 22nd. Several shots were exchanged.

It is officially denied at Berlin that the Prussians ordered a conscription in the countries they have entered.

In Italy the Austrians expect to be attacked on three sides: at Venice by the Italian fleet, on the side of the Tyrol by Garibaldi and lastly by Gen. Cialdini, who will cross the Po.

The Italian military declaration of war against Austria was issued on the 20th from the headquarters of the Italian army at Cremona. It is addressed by Gen. Cialdini to the archduke Albert commanding the Austrian army in Venetia. It recounts Italy's grievance in regard to Venetia and gives notice that hostilities will commence in three days, unless the archduke declines to accept the delay.

It was reported that the Prussian vanguard would arrive near Frankfort on the 21st.

Count Bismark in a despatch to the Prussian representatives declares that the entry of Prussian troops into Hanover, Saxony, and Hesse, was a necessary measure of self-defence.

A Hanoverian ship had been captured by the Prussian men-of-war in Bremen harbor roads.

Prince Wilhelm Von Hannan, the third son of the elector of Hesse, had been taken prisoner by the Prussians. The 8th federal army corps, 60,000 strong, under Prince Alexander of Prussia, had effected a concentration. The Hamburg military contingent had received orders to hold itself ready to march into the Duchies. Hamburg will be occupied by a Prussian corps.

Bonnse steady. Rentes 62f 65c.

Notice has been officially given that the Spanish squadron has been ordered home from the Pacific. Three Spanish vessels were reported to have been destroyed by Peruvian men-of-war of the Platte river.

London, June 24.—The Italian army crossed the Mincio on the 23rd instant, entirely unopposed.

The Prussians left a small garrison at Dresden, and advanced into Bohemia without resistance. A slight collision had occured among the Austrians and Prussians in Silesia, when the former retired.

Barricades were thrown up and after an obstinate resistance the insurgents surrendered at discretion. Gen. Prim has been arrested at Bayonne by the French authorities.

THE BUDGET.

The Finance Minister on Tuesday opened his budget, which shows, over expenditure, a credit balance of $326,000. But in the meantime he proposes an increase of duties which will be felt very seriously by the country. He proposes—

To raise the excise duty on spirits from 30 to 60 cents a gallon.

To rise the customs duty on whiskey, brandy, to a uniform specific standard of 70 cents a gallon.

To levy a duty on Indian corn, and coarse grains from the States of 10 cents a bushel.

To levy a duty on flour coming from the States of 50 cents a barrel.

To abolish the Free Ports at Gaspe and Sault Ste. Marie.

To raise the duty on tea from 9 to 12 and 22½ cents per lb.

To impose an export duty on saw logs of 25c per standard log.

To change the method of levying the duty which will hereafter be levied on accumulated charges at the port of shipment.

To reduce the duties on sugar to the English standard, viz., refined sugar $3 per 100 lbs; white clayed $2 80 yellow muscovado, brown clayed $2.25; other sugars $1 75.

To make the duty on cane juice $1.50 per gallon, and molasses $1 per gallon.

To impose a specific duty of 10 cents per gallon on wine in wood, not over 26 degrees of proof spirits, and 25 cents per gallon on wine containing over 26 degrees.

On wine in bottles, except sparkling wine, $1.20 per dozen.

The duty on coffee is reduced, and there is a general reduction on manufactured goods of about five per cent. The exact figures we cannot give to day.

These changes go into effect at once.

On the more strictly financial question Mr. Galt announced that the Government had to provide for over $5,000,000, to raise which they proposed, instead of going to England, to issue legal tender notes to that extent.

News from England concerning the Fenian Raid.

Very little has come to hand yet. The Times and some other papers are loud in their praise of the U. S. Government for their action in the matter.

The Standard expresses the conviction that the Canadians will do their duty as becomes Englishmen and Christians, and adds that there is a serious account to settle with the United States.

The Liverpool Courier says, at this juncture we would commend to the brotherhood the careful study of Mr. Gladstone's speech at the Liverpool Philharmonic hall in which the promised the land pirates of America the most condign punishment if they dared carry fire and sword into the peaceful homes of the Canadians.

That the Damascus conveyed but a very vague and confused account of the affair to England, seems evident from the following extract from a Liverpool paper, the editor of which should rub up his geography, and ascertain whether Fort Erie is in Canada or the States. Our cost temporary says:

The Fenian invasion of Canada has at length begun; but it does not appear to be a very formidable affair, or one that will involve much trouble in its repression. On the 31st ult. we learn in a brief telegram, but the despatch is vague and unsatisfactory—the brotherhood crossed the Niagara and captured Fort Erie a small village near Buffalo; but as both places are on the United States side of the border, it is not easy to understand Fenian tactics. Did the invaders come from Canada, and is their mission the subjugation of the United States? This however, can hardly be the case when we find the Federal troops marching to the frontier to preserve neutrality, not to drive the enemy into the Lake. There is a further report that on the 2nd inst., an engagement occurred at Ridgeway between the Fen

The Great English Remedy.

SIR JAMES CLARKE'S

CELEBRATED FEMALE PILLS,

Prepared from a Prescription of Sir James Clarke, M. D., Physician Extraordinary to the Queen.

This well-known Medicine is no imposition, but a sure and safe remedy, for Female Difficulties and Obstruction from any cause whatever; and although a powerful remedy, it contains nothing hurtful to the constitution. To married ladies it is peculiarly suited. It will in a short time bring on the monthly period with regularity.

In all cases of nervous and spinal affections, pain in the back and limbs, heaviness, fatigue on slight exertion, palpitation of the heart, lowness of spirits, hysterics, sick headache, shiftes, and all the painful diseases occasioned by a disordered system, these Pills will effect a cure when all other means have failed.

☞ These Pills have never been known to fail, where the directions on the second page of the Pamphlet are well observed.

For full particulars, get a pamphlet, free, of the Agent.

N. B. $1 and six postage stamps enclosed to any authorised Agent will ensure a bottle, containing Pills, by return mail.

DARLEY'S

Arabian Heave Remedy and Condition Medicine

IS positively superior to any or all other preparations for the cure of Heaves, Coughs, Thick and Broken Wind, and all diseases which affect the Wind of Horses; also, as a Condition Medicine, surpassing everything of the kind; is easy to give, sure to cure, and safe in all cases and at all times, and does not prevent the horse from being worked while using it.

It clears away the breathing apparatus, by removing from the air-cells the remarkable lymph, or that secretion which in Heaves clogs them, causing a difficulty in breathing, and by its action on the diseased part causing the mucous membrane to resume its natural dimensions, thus equalizing the circulation of the blood, and restoring the diseased vessels to their natural size; by its use the horse's appetite is improved, all derangements of the digestive organs corrected, softening the skin, and giving to the coat a sleek and shining appearance.

THE CANADIAN PAIN DESTROYER

As a Family Medicine, it is well and favorably known, relieving thousands from pains in the Side, Back and Head, Coughs, Colds. Sore Throat. Sprains, Bruises, Cramps in the Stomach, Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Bowel Complaints, Burns, Scalds, Frost-bites, &c. &c.

THE CANADIAN PAIN DESTROYER

Has now been before the Public for a length of time, and wherever used is well liked, never failing in a single instance to give permanent relief when timely used, and we have never known a single case of dissatisfaction, where the Directions have been properly followed, but on the contrary all are delighted with its operations, and speak in the highest terms of its Virtues and Magical effects.

We speak from experience in this matter, having tested it, thoroughly and therefore those who are suffering from any of the complaints for which it is recommended may depend upon its being a Sovereign Remedy.

The astonishing efficacy of the Canadian Pain Destroyer, in curing the diseases for which it is recommended, and its wonderful success in subduing the torturing pains of Rheumatism, and in relieving Nervous Affections, entitle it to a high rank in the list of remedies for these complaints. Orders are coming in from Medicine Dealers, in all parts of the Country for further supplies, and each testifying as to the universal satisfaction it gives.

The Canadian Pain destroyer never fails to give immediate relief All Medicine dealers keep it. Physicians order and use it; and no family will be without it after once trying it Price only Twenty-five cents per Bottle.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any Cologne, used to bathe the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for handkerchiefs, &c. It is unsurpassed from the rich Southern Magnolia, and has obtained a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents,

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

"Jes' so!"—Exactly!—Solon Shingle said; they were there "every time." If he felt "owly" in the morning, he took Plantation Bitters; if he felt weary at night, he took Plantation Bitters; if he lacked appetite, was weak, languid or unusually oppressed, he took Plantation Bitters; and they never failed to set him on his pins square and firm.

Few persons want any better authority; but as some may, just read the following:

"* * * I owe much to you, for I verily believe the Plantation Bitters have saved my life.

REV. W. H. WAGONER, Madrid, N. Y."

"* * * I have been a great sufferer from Dyspepsia, and had to abandon preaching. * * The Plantation Bitters have cured me

REV. C. A. MILLWOOD, New York City.

"* * * I had lost all appetite—was so weak and enervated I could hardly walk, and had a perfect dread of society. * * * The Plantation Bitters have set me all right.

JAMES HEIMINWAY, St. Louis, Mo."

"* * * The Plantation Bitters have cured me of a derangement of the Kidneys and Urinary Organs, that distressed me for years. They act like a charm.

C. C. MOORE, 254 Broadway, N. Y."

Mrs. O. M. DEVOE, manager of the Union Home School for Soldiers' Children, says she "has given it to the weak and invalid children under her charge, with the most happy and gratifying results." We have received over a hundred reams of such certificates, but no advertisement is so effective as what people themselves say of a good article. Our fortune and our reputation is at stake. The original quality and high character of these goods will be sustained under every and all circumstances. They have already obtained a sale in every town, village, parish and hamlet among civilized nations. Base imitators try to come as near our name and style as they can, and because a good article cannot be sold as low as a poor one, they find some support from parties who do not care what they sell. Be on your guard. See our private stamp over the cork.

P. H. DRAKE & CO., New York City.

Over a Million Dollars Saved!

Gentlemen:—"I had a negro man worth $1,200 who took cold from a bad hurt in the leg, and was useless for over a year. I had used everything I could hear of without benefit, until I tried the Mexican Mustang Liniment.—It soon effected a permanent cure."

J. L. DOWNING.

Montgomery, Ala., June 17, 1865.

"I take pleasure in recommending the Mexican Mustang Liniment as a valuable and indispensible article for Sprains, Sores, Scratches or Galls on Horses. Our men all say it acts like magic."

J. W. HEWITT,
Foreman for America, Wells, Fargo's and Harnden's Express

"The Sprain of my daughters ankle, occasioned while skating last winter, was entirely cured in one week, after she commenced using your celebrated Mustang Liniment.

ED. SEELY."

Gloucester, Mass., Aug. 1, 1865.

It is an admitted fact that the Mexican Mustang Liniment performs more cures in shorter time, on man and beats, than any article ever discovered. Families, livery-men and planters should always have it on hand. Quick and sure it certainly is. All genuine is wrapped in steel-plate engravings, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook Chemist, and the private U. S. stamp of Demas Barnes & Co over the top.

An effort has been made to counterfeit it with a cheap stone plate label. Look closely!

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

It is a most delightful Hair Dressing.
It eradicates scurf and dandruff.
It keeps the hair rich, soft and glossy.
It prevents hair turning gray and falling off.
It restores hair upon prematurely bald heads.
This is just what Lyon's Kathairon will do.
It is pretty—it is cheap—durable. It is literally sold by the car-load, and yet its almost increasing, until there is hardly a country store that does not keep it, or a family that does not use it.

E. THOMAS LYON, Chemist, N. Y.

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

Who would not be beautiful? Who would not add to their beauty? What gives that marble purity and distingue appearance we observe upon the stage, and in the city belle? It is no longer a secret They use Hagan's Magnolia Balm Its continued use removes tan, freckles, pimples and roughness, from the face and hands, and leaves the complexion smooth, transparent, blooming and ravishing. Unlike many cosmetics it contains no material injurious to the skin. Any Druggists will order it for you, if not on hand, at 50 cts. per bottle.

W. E. HAGAN, Troy, N. Y., Chemist.
LEMAS BARNES & Co.,
Wholesale Agents, N. Y.

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

Helmstreet's Inimitable Hair Coloring is not a dye. All instantaneous dyes are composed of lunar caustic, and more or less destroy the vitality and beauty of the hair. This is the original hair Coloring, and has been growing in favor over twenty years. It restores gray hair to its original color by gradual absorption, in a most remarkable manner. It is also a beautiful hair dressing. Sold in two sizes—50 cents and $1—by all dealers.

C. HELMSTREET, Chemist.

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER—for Indigestion, Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, Flatulency, &c, where a warming stimulant is required. Its careful preparation and entire purity makes it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cts. per bottle. Ask for "Lyon's" Pure Extract. Take no other.

Poetry.

Good Heart and Willing Hand.

In storm or shine, two friends of mine
Go forth to work or play!
And when they visit poor men's homes,
They bless them by the way.

'Tis will ng Hand! 'tis cheerful Heart!
The best two friends I know;
Around the hearth come Joy and Mirth
Wherever their faces glow.

Come shine—/ in bright! Come dark—'tis light!
Come cold—'twill warm ere long!
So heavily fall the hammer strokes
Merrily sound the song!

Who falls may stand, if good Right hand
Is first, not second best;
Who weeps may sing, if Kindly Heart
Has l dging in his breast.

The humblest board has dainties pour'd
When they sit down to dine,
The meat they eat is honey sweet,
The water's good as wine.

They fill the purse with honest gold,
They lead no creature wrong,
So heavily fall the hammer strokes!
Merrily sound the song!

Without these the poor complaint
Of evils hard to bear,
But with them Poverty grows rich,
And finds a loaf to spare.

Their looks are fire—their words inspire,
Their deeds give courage high,
About their knees the children run
Or climb they know not why.

Who sells, or rides, or walks with them,
Ne'er finds the journey long—
So heavily fall the hammer strokes!
Merrily sound the song!

UNCLE INGOT.

If ever you or yours get five pound out of me, madam, before I die, I promise you, you shall have five thousand, and I am a man of my word.

So spoke Mr. Ingot Beardmore, dry salter and common council man of London city, to Dorothea Elizabeth, his widowed sister-in-law, who had applied to him for pecuniary succor at out three months after the death of his youngest brother Isaac, her husband.

There were harshness and stubborn determination enough in his reply, but there was no niggardly cruelty. Mrs. Isaac wanted money, it is true, but only in a sense in which we all want it. She was only poor in comparison with the great wealth of the relative by marriage. Her income was large enough for any ordinary —Mr. Ingot said "legitimate"—purpose, but not sufficient for sending her boy to Eton, or finishing him off at the universities as it was the maternal wish to do.

Mr. Ingot hated such genteel intentions; Christ's Hospital had been a fashionable enough school for him and he had "finished off," as a clerk, at forty pounds a year, in that very respectable house of which he was now senior partner. With the results of that education, as exemplified in himself, he was perfectly satisfied, and if his nephews only turned out half as well, their mother, he thought, might think herself uncommonly lucky. Her family had given themselves airs upon the occasion of her marrying Isaac—"allying herself with commerce," some of them called it—and Ingot had never forgiven them.

He gloried in his own profession, although government had never seen fit to ennoble any member of it, and perhaps all the more on that account; for he was one of the Radicals who are not "snobs" at heart, but rather aristocrats. He honestly believed that noblemen and gentlemen were the lowest orders, and those who toiled and strove, the upper-crust of the human pie.

When he was told that the former classes often toiled and strove in their own way as much as the others, he made a gesture of contempt, and "blew" like an exasperated whale. It was a vulgar sort of retort, of course, but so eminently expressive, that his opponent rarely pursued the subject.

He rather liked his sister-in-law, in spite of her "good" birth, and would have doubtless assisted her had she consented to bring up her children according to his views; but since she preferred to take her own way, he withdrew himself more and more from her society, until they saw nothing at all of one another. He had no intention of leaving his money away from his brother's children; he had much too strong a sense of duty for that; and as for marriage, that was an idea that had never entered into his old head. He had not made a fool of himself by falling in love in middle age, as Isaac had done (in youth he had not time for such follies,) and it was not likely that at sixty-five he should commit any such imprudence. So his nephews and nieces felt confident of being provided for in future. In the present, however, as time went on, and the education of both girls and boys grew more expensive Mrs. Isaac's income became greatly straightened. Her own family very much applauded the economy way in which she was bringing up her children, and especially her independence of spirit with relation to her tradesman brother-in-law, but they never assisted her with a penny.

The young gentleman at Cambridge was therefore kept on very short allowance; and the young ladies whose beauty was something remarkable, affected white muslin, and wore no meretricious jewelry. Their pin money was very limited, poor things, and they made their own clothes at home by the help of a sewing machine. If Uncle Ingot could have seen them thus diligently employed, his heart would perhaps have softened towards them, but, as I have said, they never got that chance.

John, the elder, had been but six years old when he had last called at their highly rented but diminutive habitation in Mayfair, and now she was eighteen, and had never seen him since. Although she had, of course, grown out of the man's recollection, she remembered his figure head, as she wickedly called his rigid features, uncommonly well; and, indeed, nobody who had ever seen it was likely to forget it. His countenance was not so much human as lignaceous; and his prodile nephew Jack had actually seen upon a certain hobby in the lime-walk of Clare Hall at Cambridge, a sketch more like than any silhouette ever cut out of black paper. They had laughed at the old gentleman in early days, and snapped their fingers at their uncle's churlishness, but it had become no laughing matter now.

That remark of old Uncle Ingot's, "If ever you or yours get five pounds out of me, madam, before I die, I promise you, you shall have five thousand; and I am a man of my word," had become a very serious sentence, condemning all the family to, if not poverty, to very serious want. What it meant of course was, that he was resolutely determined to give them nothing. In vain the young ladies worked for Uncle Ingot slippers and book-markers for his birth day, and sent to him their best wishes at Christmas, in Rimmel's highly scented envelopes; in vain Jack sent him a pound of the most excellent snuff that Beacon's Emporium could furnish, at the beginning of every term. He always wrote back a civil letter of thanks in a clear and clerkly letter, but there was never any enclosure. When Mrs. Isaac asked him to dinner, he declined in a caustic manner—avowing that he did not feel himself comfortable at the aristocratic tables of the West End—and sent her a pine apple for the desert, of his own growing. He had really no ill-feeling towards his relatives, although he kept himself so estranged from them, but I think this sort of conduct tickled the old gentleman's grim sense of honor. If he could have found some legitimate excuse for "making it up" with his sister-in law, within the first year or two of their falling out, perhaps he would have been glad to do so; but time had now so widened the breech that it was not to be easily repaired. What he had satirically written as he declined her invitation, had grown to be true; he rarely went out to society, and almost never into the company of ladies, the elder portion of whom he considered frivolous and vexatious, and the younger positively dangerous. He had a few old bachelor friends, however, with whom he kept up a cordial intercourse, and spent with them various festivals of the year, as regularly as they came round.

On the 31st of December, for instance, he never omitted to go down to Reading, and "see the old year out and the new year in," in the company of Tom Whaffles, with whom he had worn the yellow stockings in those school days that had passed away more than half a century ago.

Tom and Isaac had been even greater cronies as boys than Tom Ingot, but the latter did not like Tom the less upon that account; secretly, I think he esteemed him the more highly as a link between himself and that luckless family whose very existence he yet chose to ignore.—Mr. Whaffles had intimate relations with them still; they came down to stay with him whenever his sister paid him a visit and could act as their hostess; but this never happened in the last week of the year. Tom was never to speak of them to his old friend—that it was only tacitly understood, but had been laid down in writing as the basis of their intimacy.

On the 31st of December last, Mr. Ingot Beard more found himself as usual, at the Paddington Station, looking for an empty compartment, for his own company had got to be very pleasing to him. Having attained his object and rolled himself up in the corner of his carriage in several great coats, with his feet upon the hot tin, and his hands clothed in thick mittens, and looking altogether like a polar bear who liked to make himself comfortable—when everything was arranged, I say, to the old gentleman's complete satisfaction, who should invade his privacy, just as the train was about to start, and the whistle had sounded, out one of the most bewitching young ladies you ever set eyes on!

Madam this carriage is engaged, growled he pointing to the umberella, carpet-bag, and books, which he had distributed upon all the seats, in order to give it that appearance.

Only engaged to you I think sir, replied the charmer, flippantly. Happy carriage! —I wish I was. Isn't that pretty?

Mr. Beardmore never had anything half so shocking said to him in his life, and if the train had not already set in motion, he would have called upon the guard for help, and left the carriage forthwith. As it was he could only look upon this shameless young person with an expression of the severest reprobation.

At this same time his heart sunk within him at the reflection that the train was not to stop till he reached his destination—Reading. What indignities might he not have to suffer before he could obtain protection! She was a modest looking young lady, too, very simply dressed, and her voice was particularly sweet and pre-possessing, notwithstanding the very dreadful remark in which she had indulged.—Perhaps she was out of her mind—and at this idea Mr. Ingot Beardmore broke out, notwithstanding the low temperature, into a very profuse prespiration.

Now, what will you give me for a kiss, you old—you polar bear I asked the fair stranger, playfully, as the train flew by Ealing.

Nothing, madam, nothing; I am astonished at you, answered Mr. Beardmore, looking anxiously round the carriage in the desperate hope of finding one of those newly patented inventions for affording communication with the guard.

Well, then, I'll take one, and leave it to your honor, continued the young lady with a peal of silver laughter; and with that she lightly rose, and before the old gentleman could free himself from his wraps, or ward her off with his muffetees she had imprinted a kiss upon his horrey cheek. Mr. Beardmore's breath was so utterly taken away by this assault, that he remained speechless, but his countenance was probably more full of expression than it had ever been in his life.

O, no, I am not mad, laughed she in reply to it; although I have taken a fancy to such a wonderful creature. Now, come, if I kiss you again, what will you give?

I shall give you in charge of the police, madam, the instant that I arrive in Reading.

Give me in charge? What for, you curious piece of antiquity?

For an assault, madam; yes for an assault. Don't you know that you have no right to kiss people without their consent in the matter?

Here the young lady laughed so violently that the tears came into her eyes.

Do you suppose, you poor old doting creature, that anybody will ever believe such a story as that? Do you ever use such a thing as a looking glass, you poor dear? Are you aware how very unprepossessing your appearance is, even when you don't frown, as you are doing now in a manner that is enough to frighten one? You have, of course, a perfect right to your opinion, but if you suppose the police will agree with you, you will find yourself much mistaken. The idea of anybody wanting to kiss you will reasonably enough appear to them preposterous.

What is it you require of me, you wicked creature? cried the old bachelor in an agony of shame and rage.

I want payment for my kiss. To a gentleman at your time of life, who scarcely could expect to be so favored, surely it is worth—what shall I say?—five pounds. What! not so much? Well, then, here's another for your other cheek. Like a flash of lightning, she suited the action to her words. There, then, five pounds for the two, and I won't take a shilling less. You will have to give it to the poor boy at the police station, if not to me. For I intend, in case you are obstinate, to complain of your disgraceful conduct to the guard at the first opportunity. I shall give you into custody, sir, as sure as you are alive. You will be put upon your oath, you know, and all you will dare to say will be that I kissed you, and not you me. What "roaring of laughter" there will be in court, and how funny it will look in the papers? Here the young lady began to laugh again, as though she had already read it there. Mr. Beardmore's grim sense of honor was, as usual, accompanied by a keen dislike of appearing ridiculous. True, he hated to be imposed upon; still, of the two evils, was it not better to pay five pounds than to be made the laughing stock of his bachelor friends, who are not the sort of people to commiserate one in a misfortune of this kind.

In short Mr. Ingot Beardmore paid the money. Mr. Thomas Whaffles found his guest that evening anything but talkative. There was a select party of the male sex invited to meet him, by whom the rich old dry-salter was accustomed to be regarded as an oracle; but upon this occasion he had nothing to say; the consciousness of having been "done" oppressed him. His lips were tightly sealed; his cheeks were still glowing from the audacious insult that had been put upon them; his fingers clutched the pocket book in which there was a five pound note less than there ought to be. But when his host and himself were left alone that night, "seeing the old year out and the new year in," his heart began to thaw under the genial influences of friendship and gin punch, and he told his late adventure to Tom Whaffles, not without some enjoyment of his own mischance.

I really almost forgive the jade, said he, for having taken me so cleverly. I dare say, however, she makes up to a profession of it; and that half a score of old gentlemen have been coerced before now into ransoming their good name as I did. And yet she was a modest and lady like looking girl as ever you saw.

Was she anything like this? inquired Mr. Whaffles, producing a photograph.

Why, that's the very girl! exclaimed the guest—Ha! Ha! Tom; so you, too have been one of her victims, have you? Well, now, this is most extraordinary.

Not at all, my dear fellow. I know her very well, and her sister, and her mother, and her brother too. I can introduce you to her if you like. There's not the least harm in her; bless you she only kissed you for fun.

A bit of fun! cried Mr. Beardmore. Why she got a five pound note out of me!

But she does not mean to keep it, I am sure. Would you like to see her again? Come, Yes or No?

If she will give me back my money, Yes.

Very well, returned the host; mind you ask for yourself, and be rang the bell pretty sharply twice.

Here she is; its your niece, Miss Julia. Her mother and sister are now staying under this roof.

Yes, uncle, said the lady demurely.—Here is your five pound note; please to give me that five thousand which you promised maxima if ever she or hers got five pounds out of you; for you are a man of your word, I know. But what would be better still would be to let me kiss you once more, in the character of your dutiful niece; and let us all love you as we want to do. It was an audacious stratagem, I admit, but I think you will forgive me—some.

There go the church bells! cried Tom Whaffles. It is the new year, and a fitting time to forget old enmities. Give your uncle a kiss, child.

Uncle Ingot made no resistance this time but avowed himself fairly conquered; and between ourselves, although he made no "favorites" among his newly reconciled relatives, but treated them with equal kindness, I think he always liked Julia best, who had been the cause of healing a quarrel which no one perhaps had regretted more at heart than Uncle Ingot himself.

A pair of lovers, fleeing from stern and cruel parents, were married in the caravansera St. Louis the other day. Papa telegraphed to the conductor to send his daughter back; but he telegraphed back: "Never return a fair on this road."

Every man has his price, so said Walpole; but he never said so much of women. The fact is, Walpole judged the ladies only too correctly for he knew that many of those dear creatures are beyond all price!

Husbands and their Habits.

Some husbands never leave home in the morning without kissing their wives and bidding them "good-by, dear," in the tones of unwearied love; and whether it be policy or fact, it has all the effect of fact, and those homes are generally pleasant ones, providing always that the wives are appreciative, and welcome the discipline in a kindly spirit. We know of an old gentleman who lived with his wife over fifty years and never left home without the kiss and the "good-by, dear." Some husbands shake hands with their wives and hurry off as fast as possible, as though the effort were a something that they were anxious to forget, holding their heads down and darting around the first corner. Some husbands, before leaving home, ask very tenderly, "What would you like for dinner, my dear?" knowing all the while that she will select something for his particular palate, and off he goes. Some husbands will leave without saying any thing at all, but thinking a good deal, as evinced by their turning round at the last point of observation, and waving an adieu at the pleasant face or faces at the window. Some husbands never say a word rising from the breakfast-table with the lofty indifference of a lord, and going out with a heartless disregard of those left behind. It is a fortunate thing for their wives that they can find sympathy elsewhere. Some husbands never leave home without some unkind word or look, apparently thinking that such a course will keep things straight in their absence. Then, on returning, some husbands come home jolly and happy, unsoured by the world; some sulky and surly with its disappointment. Some husbands bring home a newspaper or a book and bury themselves for the evening in its contents. Some husbands are called away every evening by business or social engagements; some doze in speechless stupidity on a sofa until bed-time. Some husbands are curious to learn of their wives what has transpired through the day; others are attracted by nothing short of a child's tumbling down stairs or the house taking fire. "Depend upon it," says Dr. Spooner, "that home is the happiest where kindness, and interest, and politeness, and attention are the rule on part of the husbands—of course, all the responsibility rests with them—and temptation finds no footing there. —Home Journal.

HOME MANNERS.—We sometimes meet with men who seem to think that any indulgence in an affectionate feeling is weakness. They will return from a journey, and greet their families with a distant dignity, and more among their children with the cold and lofty splendor of an iceberg surrounded by its fragments. There is a hardly more unnatural sight on earth than one of these families without a heart. A father had better extinguish a boy's eyes than take away his heart. Who that has experienced the joys of friendship, and values sympathy and affection, would not rather lose all that is beautiful in nature's scenery than be robbed of the hidden treasures of his heart? Cherish, then your heart's best affections. Indulge in the warm and gushing emotions of filial, parental love. Think it not a weakness.—God is love. Love God, everybody, and everything that is lovely. Teach your children to love the rose; the robin; to love their parents; to love God. Let it be a studied object of their domestic culture, to give them warm hearts, ardent affections. Bind your family together by those strong cords. You cannot make them too strong. Religion is love; love to God, to man.

ANCIENT WATCHES.—Many inventions of the greatest value are sometimes the most difficult to trace their origin. It is so with clocks and watches. Neither the precise year of their invention, nor the names of there inventors, can be confidently stated. Till the close of the tenth century, no other mode of measuring time than by the sun dial or hour glass, appears to have existed and then we first hear of a graduated piece of mechanism adapted to the purpose, this invention being usually ascribed to the monk Gerbert, who became Pope in 999, under the name of Sylvester, II. These clocks are cumbrous machines; and it is not till the fourteenth century that we hear of portable clocks. In the succeeding century they were much more common, and were part of the necessary furniture of a better class house. They were hung to the walls, and their movements regulated by weight and lines, like the cheap kitchen clocks of the present day. The invention of the spiral spring as the motive power, in place of weight and line, gave about the middle of the fifteenth century, the first great improvement, which now went on rapidly, and resulted in the invention of the watch—a time measure that might be carried about the person.—Book of Days.

During a commercial crisis, when there was a general rush upon the banks for payment of deposits, a rustic in Aberdeenshire who possessed £100 in the bank, hearing of the scramble, hastened to town, and presenting his deposit-receipt at the bank office, demanded payment. It was tendered in the notes of the bank. Bundling up the notes, he was heard to exclaim as he retired, 'you may break noo when you like.'

A clergyman was recently rebuked by a brother of the cloth for smoking. The culprit replied that he only used the weed in moderation. 'What do you call moderation?' inquired the other. 'Why sir,' said the offender, 'one cigar at a time.

The elections in Belgium have terminated, and have resulted favourably to the Senate, which was previously eight, is now twelve, and in the House of Representatives it was before the elections twelve, and is now eighteen.

The cattle plague has made its appearance at Fleury, near Verviers, in Belgium, in the immediate vicinity of the Prussian frontier.

A POLITICAL REVOLUTION.—The little Isle of Man, on the coast of England, with an area of two hundred and eighty square miles, and a population of fifty-two thousand three hundred and eighty seven souls, is a kingdom under the British crown, but having its own laws and legislature, called the "House of Keys," composed of twenty-four principal owners of estates. A thorough reform bill has been introduced by the Government and Council, and will probably be adopted, whatever be the course of the big brother at London. This bill abolishes the House of Keys, as at present constituted, and provides that the members of the future house shall be elected by popular suffrage instead of being self-elected as at present. By the bill the judicial functions of the house as a court of appeal in common law cases, will be transferred to the governor and his legal advisers. The present members of the house are to retire as follows:—Seven members (to be chosen by ballot) within three months after the passing of the act; four in 1867; six in 1868; and the remaining seven in 1869. The Island is to be divided into twelve electoral districts, namely, the four towns, the six sheadings, and two groups of villages forming the Northern and Southern Boroughs. Ramsey, Castletown and Peel are to have one member each. Douglas three members, four of the sheadings two members each. Voters in sheadings are to be the owners of real estate of the net annual value of not less than £8, or the tenant of real estate of the annual value of £16. In towns and boroughs the voters are to be occupiers of premises of the annual value of £8, or the owners of property of like value.

PRESBYTERIAN UNION TO BE CONSUMMATED IN THE LOWER PROVINCES.—The Halifax Presbyterian Witness, received yesterday, contains the following gratifying intelligence: "Three Presbyterian Synods meet in these Lower Provinces within a fortnight—the Church of Scotland Synod at New Glasgow, on the 26th—the Synod of New Brunswick at St. John, on the 27th, and on the same day and in the same city, the Synod of the Presbyterian Church of the Lower Provinces. Questions of much importance to the cause of religion will come before all these courts. It is expected that the Synods which are to meet in St. John will join hands and become one. This consummation has been devoutedly desired, has been prayed for and laboured for. A good Providence seems to have taken all obstacles out of the way; and the ardent desire of those who love 'Zion' are now to be realized. Ministers and elders wend the ir way to the appointed places of meeting with the full expectation that henceforth the Presbyterians of the sea Provinces will be one in name as well as in reality. It would be well if the relations between the Presbyterian Church of the Lower Provinces and the Synod of the Established Church of Scotland should come under friendly discussion. We have now a fair measure of friendly intercourse and co-operation. We work together in the educational and missionary fields. Our ministers often exchange pulpits, and the points of antagonism are very few."

A FAIR OFFER.—Dr. Franklin made the following offer to a young man: "Make," said he, "a full estimate of all you owe, and of all that is owing to you, reduce the same to a note. As fast as you can collect pay over to those you owe. If you cannot collect renew your note every year, and get the best security you can. Go to business diligently, be industrious; waste no idle moments; be very economical in all things; discard all pride; be faithful in your duty to God, by regular and hearty prayers morning and evening; attend church and meeting regular every Sunday; and do unto all men as you would they should do unto you. If you are too needy in circumstances to give to the poor, do whatever else in your power for them cheerfully, but if you can always help the worthy poor and unfortunate. Pursue this course diligently and sincerely for seven years and if you are not happy, comfortable, and independent in your circumstances, come to me and I will pay your debts." Young people try it.

HOW TO HAVE A KIND HUSBAND.—A correspondent gives a receipt for making or keeping a good natured husband:—Keep his linen in prime condition, with the requisite degree of stiffness; give him well broiled beefsteak, wholesome bread, and a sparkling cup of coffee for his breakfast; keep squalling babies and broken crockery out of sight; do not annoy him with the blunders and extravagance of Bridy; greet his evening arrival with a clean, lightsome face, well-combed hair, and a welcome kiss; have ready a cheerful supper, a bright fire in the grate, an easy chair, with comfortable gown and slippers; be merry, and tell him some agreeable news; finally, give him a well made bed in a cozy chamber.

Upon the occasion of the celebration of Princess Helena's birth day, May 25, Queen Victoria invited the children of the domestics of the royal household to a tea party in the Orangery of Windsor Castle. There were about three hundred children present. The Queen joined the party at five o'clock and remained till nearly eight in the evening, while the Princesses shared in the amusements, and danced with the delighted juveniles, for whose amusement a band of musicians had been engaged.

An American paper is responsible for the following:—"A wide-awake minister who found his congregation going to sleep one Sunday before he had fairly commenced, suddenly stopped and exclaimed—'Brethren, this isn't fair. It isn't giving a man half a chance. Wait till I get along a piece, and then, if I am't worth listening to, go to sleep; but don't go before I get commenced. Give a man a chance."

A paper out West, in speaking of an orator out that way, said that he spoke an hour and a half, and 'was sensible to the last.'

METHODIST UNION.

Steps have been taken with a view to effecting a union of the different denominations of Methodists in Canada. The resolutions adopted by the Wesleyan Conference in Montreal a couple of weeks since, will enable our readers to discuss and the position which this question has assumed:—

1. That this Conference cordially reciprocates the expressions of its conviction as to the desirableness and importance of a union of all the Methodist bodies in Canada, who believe the same doctrines, sing the same hymns, have the same form of worship, the same form hearts, the same prayers and class meetings and the same general rules of society.

2. That the Conference re-appoint a committee, to consist of an equal number of ministers and laymen, to confer with any similar committee of committees appointed by other Methodist bodies, to confer on the subject of union, and report to the next Conference.

3. That the committee be composed of the following brethren:—The ex Presidents, Co-Delegate and Secretary of the Conference, the Rev. Drs Ward, Green and Ryerson, the Rose Rev. Wm Pilot and J. C. Aikins, members of the Legislative Council, Edward Jackson, Esq., of Hamilton, John McDonald, M. P. P., of Toronto, and Edwin Chown, Esq., of Kingston.

The New Connection Methodist Conference has taken similar action, and it is to be hoped that the gentlemen, lay and clerical, to whom the direction of the movement has been committed, will be able to find a basis of agreement that will be satisfactory to the various societies who are looking forward to a union as desirable. The success which has attended the union of the Presbyterian bodies who now compose the Canada Presbyterian Church will tend to stimulate the exertions, and increase the confidence of those who are now striving for a similar consummation initiated the movement, and we are happy to see that it has met with such a cordial reception by the more numerous body of Wesleyans. That it is a desirable event, none will question. It is an anomalous state of affairs, that churches, holding exactly similar views, "who believe the same doctrines, have the same form of worship," and "the same general rules of society" should, to a great extent waste their means and energies, by keeping up separate organizations and distinct societies while the principles which they all hold in common could be more efficiently promoted by a concentration of effort and closer combination among themselves. According to the last census (1861), the whole number of Methodists in the United Canadas was 272,184, classed under four heads Wesleyans, 244,206, Episcopal Methodists, 74,152, New Connexion, 30,492, and other Methodists 24,204.—Globe.

The Canadian Volunteers in Chicago.

The feeling against the Chicago Canadians who left to fight for their country is intense.—They are openly threatened, and yesterday one of the boys, Mr. Clark, was attacked by four Fenians, and roughly used. If the Chicago Canadians go out after dark they are followed by Fenians, watchful for a chance to attack them.

Only two or three of the entire company have procured their former situations. Many people are afraid to employ them, as the Fenians swear they will set fire to the establishments of any persons who give them work. They also threaten that if the prisoners in Canada are punished they will have revenge out of the Canadians in this country. They are more active than ever in preparing for another raid. Their doings are conducted with the utmost secrecy. They will be in canada again, but will go in a different way.

The Fenians are much enraged at Andy Johnson and the Democrats. They have gone over to the Republicans, and will certainly vote with them next election. The latter party are therefore writing up the Brotherhood, and encouraging them every way they can.

Canadians here have to stand a great deal of abuse. It makes one's blood boil to hear them talk of the Queen's Own. Everybody is with the Fenians now, and if there is not a greater attack than ever made on Canada in short time, it won't be for want of encouragement on the part of the Americans. Every one, excepting British subjects, sympathises with the Fenians, and as a result they are worse than ever.—Chicago correspondence, July 2.

It is said that one of the Fenian prisoners in Toronto is the Rev. Mr. Lumsden, formerly of St James' Cathedral Church of that city. Another Fenian prisoner in the above city is reported to be the Rev. Mr. McMahon, a priest of Indianapolis a brother of a gentleman residing in the city.

The efficacy of Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers in in curing Coughs, Colds, and all Bronchial affections, and cheering the afflicted, has passed into a proverb. In the United States, where these marvellous Wafers are known, they bear down all opposition and eclipse all rivalry; the demand for them has steadily increased for the last twenty years, until now the sales average over one hundred thousand boxes a year. Eminent members of the medical profession without number admit that they know of no preparation producing such beneficial results as these Wafers. When taken in season they effect a permanent cure. Sold by every druggist and most of the respectable stores throughout the Province, at 25 cents per box.

PRINCE OF WALES.—The Prince of Wales will now, thanks to the skilful and vigilent management of his father, enter into an enjoyment of an income of £250,000 a year, and a half million of ready money from the revenues of the Duchy of Cornwall.

This is a nice little sum of money for an annual dividend, but with all this vast amount of money which will be under his controll, it will not go so far to relevo rheumatism, pains in the side and back, tooth ache, burns, bruises, frost-bites, &c., as a bottle of the "Canadian Pain Destroyer," which is sold by all Medicine Dealers, at the low price of 25 cts per bottle.

HORSES SAVED.

The lives of thousands of Horses have been saved during the past year, and the credit is due to "Darby's Arabian Heave Remedy and Condition Medicine." This preparation is being extensively used, and excels from all the highest praise. Nothing of the kind has ever before been half as successful or given such universal satisfaction; it cannot be equalled.—We can confidently recommend it, and would advise all who own horses to keep a supply of it on hand—it may be the means of saving your horses life.

Remember the name, and see that the signature of Lloyd & Co. is on each package.

The Great English Remedy.

SIR JAMES CLARKE'S

CELEBRATED FEMALE PILLS,

Prepared from a Prescription of Sir James Clarke, M. D., Physician Extraordinary to the Queen.

This well-known Medicine is no imposition, but a safe and safe remedy, for Female Difficulties and Obstruction from any cause whatever; and although a powerful remedy, it contains nothing hurtful to the constitution. To married ladies it is peculiarly suited. It will in a short time bring on the monthly period with regularity.

In all cases of nervous and spinal affections, pain in the back and limbs, heaviness, fatigue on slight exertion, palpitation of the heart lowness of spirits, hysterics, sick headache, whites, and all the painful diseases occasioned by a disordered system, these Pills will effect a cure when all other means have failed.

☞ These Pills have never been known to fail, where the directions on the second page of the Pamphlet are well observed.

For full particulars, get a pamphlet, free, of the Agent.

N. B. $1 and six postage stamps enclosed to any authorised Agent will ensure a bottle, containing Pills, by return mail.

Among the most important of modern Medical discoveries, stands

THE CANADIAN PAIN DESTROYER

As a Family Medicine, it is well and favorably known, relieving thousands from pains in the Side, Back and Head, Coughs, Colds. Sore Throat. Sprains, Bruises, Cramps in the Stomach, Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Bowel Complaints, Burns, Scalds, Frost-bites, &c. &c.

THE CANADIAN PAIN DESTROYER

Has now been before the Public for a length of time, and wherever used is well liked, never failing in a single instance to give permanent relief when timely used, and we have never known a single case of dissatisfaction, where the Directions have been properly followed, but on the contrary all are delighted with its operations, and speak in the highest terms of its Virtues and Magical effects.

We speak from experience in this matter, having tested it, thoroughly and therefore those who are suffering from any of the complaints for which it is recommended may depend upon its being a Sovereign Remedy.

The astonishing efficacy of the Canadian Pain Destroyer, in curing the diseases for which it is recommended, and its wonderful success in subduing the torturing pains of Rheumatism, and in relieving Nervous Affections, entitle it to a high rank in the list of remedies for these complaints. Orderers coming in from Medicine Dealers, in all parts of the Country for further supplies, and each testifying as to the universal satisfaction it gives.

The Canadian Pain destroyer never fails to give immediate relief. All Medicine dealers keep it. Physicians order and use it; and no family will be without it after once trying it. Price only Twenty-five cents per Bottle.

DARLEY'S

Arabian Heave Remedy and Condition Medicine

IS positively superior to any or all other preparations for the cure of Heaves, Coughs, Thick and Broken Wind, and all diseases which affect the Wind of Horses; also, as a Condition Medicine, surpassing everything of the kind: is easy to give, sure to cure, and safe in all cases and at all times, and does not prevent the horse from being worked while using it.

It at once the breathing apparatus, by removing from the air-cells the constitutable lymph, or that secretion which in Heaves clogs them, causing a difficulty in breathing, and by its action on the diseased part causing the mucous membrane to resume its natural dimensions, thus equalizing the circulation of the blood, and restoring the distended vessels to their natural size; by its use the horse's appetite is improved, all derangements of the digestive organs corrected, softening the skin, and giving to the coat a sleek and shining appearance.

THURSDAY, JULY 12, 1866.

THE CELEBRATION.

44 LODGES PRESENT.

OVER 6000 PEOPLE IN TOWN.

This will be one of the great days to be remembered by Orangemen in this County. At a very early hour the greatest preparations were being made for the celebration of the "Glorious, Pious and Immortal Memory." Arches were erected, flags hauled up into the breeze, and guns were being fired in various directions. By eight o'clock waggons, carriages and other vehicles were herrying in from every quarter, and by ten the streets were crowded with every class and sex—old and young—all eager to celebrate the great day. By 11.40, two trains arrived, literally crowded; each train had ten open cars and some passenger cars—These brought in the brethern from Port Hope, Hope, Cavan, Emily, Ops, Lindsay, &c. One or two Lodges came from Bobcaygeon, one from Lakefield, some from Omemee, Norwood, Dummer, Asphodel and Belmont. These, with the Lodges belonging to the Town and Ashburnham made the number of people almost above computation. Soon after landing from the cars, the different Lodges proceeded in order to the different places where preparations had been made for refreshment. The Port Hope brethern were accompanied by Philp's Brass Band of Port Hope, and these with the fifes and drums made the town re-echo with the good old tunes so pleasant to the ears of every true man.—But while those already arrived were taking dinner, the Otonabee arrived bringing several Lodges from Cobourg and other places; these were accompanied by Chalaupka's band. The boat had been so overloaded that she had to proceed very slowly and did not arrive for an hour after the others. As soon as possible these were in quarters where they could obtain something for the inner-man, to refresh and strengthen After this all proceeded to Ashburnham to visit the Ashburnham Lodge, they next assembled in the front of the Court House, where a platform had been erected, and on which we noticed the Rev. Mr. Beck, Rev. Messrs. Cantlon; Scott, of Keene; and Williams, of Hiawatha; also the different County and District Masters present; Masters of Lodges and a few others.

D. G. Hatton, County Master of the County, in a brief speech remarked that he had received a letter of apology from Rev. Mr. Gilmour, stating that indisposition prevented him being present; also one from Rev. Mr. Brock, stating that his removal to another field of labor would not permit him being present. He then introduced Rev. Mr. Beck, as the first speaker.

Mr. Beck, on rising, remarked that he was glad to be present on the occasion, as he must say that the feelings that actuated them to celebrate the day were common to all, whether orangemen or not, as the feelings of loyalty which filled their breasts did not surpass those which filled the breasts of others present. Englishmen could look back to the difficulties the overcoming of which, this day celebrated, and the events of 1688, although not a destructive revolution, had enabled the people to say they had rights that must not be encroached upon. They saw the army increasing, but having learned that the power belonged to the people, they would not relinquish that power, and then it was that William, Prince of Orange was called over to the aid of the people, and settled it, as ever since there are constitutional methods of settling grievances, the government being amenable to the people. To these events we owe much that is dear to all Britons, and William, Prince of Orange was the instrument, in God's hand, to bring about these events.

Thos. Stephenson, C. M., Victoria, next came forward. He felt that he was unable to do justice to the occasion, and especially as there were some Editors in the County of Peterborough who branded the Orangemen of Victoria as disloyal. (A voice not so.) and had declared that it was a shame not to allow a procession of people who were Fenians to march under a green flag. But he would tell them the Orangemen of Victoria were loyal; they came there by invitation and if needed they would do so again. (Just then the platform gave way but done no harm.) And if the government had armed them they would be among the first to meet the foe.

Rev. Mr. Scott, W. C. of the County of Peterborough, said he was proud that principles of orangeism was more substantial than the platform on which they stood.—These principles had been purchased in battle, and they, as orangemen, came to celebrate the battle of the Boyne, at which those liberties had been purchased. Orangemen were all loyal, but he believed there were others loyal as well as they, and if they were loyal, what of it, ought not all men to be loyal? All met to-day to celebrate the events of the battle of the Boyne at which their civil liberties were purchased. They were often misrepresented, they were accused of many things, but he did not know anything for which they had cause to blush. The association had its origin in England, its constitution drafted by a godly bishop and was eagerly signed by every class, but many had forgotten the pit whence they had been dugged. It was orangeism in its youth that crushed the power of popery, and orangeism now in its manhood would be able to overthrow all enemies. It was not a secret institution, as its oaths might be known by all, and its obligations were well known. It fostered no enmity against Roman Catholics, on the contrary, was the friend of them, being the eternal, implacable enemy of any system that enslaves so many.

Mr. Van Ingen, C. M., Cobourg, did not make speeches, he came at the invitation of Peterborough and was glad he did so; he brought a few Orangemen with him (seven Lodges) to show them the brethern and sisters of Peterboro, and how they did up here.

Rev. Mr. Williams, of Hiawatha, remarked that he supposed the people would do with him as the old lady of whom he heard did in her prayer, when she prayed "The Lord bless the man that makes the shortest prayer." Orangeism was like the Saxon language—it gathers every race and made all one. The Americans were beginning to feel a power growing up among them that would injure, but Orangeism was not like Fenianism, as it (Orangeism) did no harm to any one.

Johnston Murphy, D. M. of Cavan, did not make speeches, but would call on Bro. Ogilvie to make one for him. But of Mr Ogilvie's speech all we could gather (with the drumming) was that if all Orangemen were as loyal as the Cavan Blazers they could soon defy the Fenians, as those Fenians must be cursed fools who would dare attack the British Lion.

Rev. Bro. Cantlon was the next speaker, and was loudly applauded during his speech, although the drumming hindered the hearing of much of it. Orangeism, he was glad to say had nothing to do with darkness, it loved light, not like some other societies; it had nothing to be ashamed of; it was not a secret association only so far as to guard its halls against the vile and base. Of some Orangemen it might be said they were men of expediency; some were just and true; but those time-servers would soon be got rid of, and he hoped that all would excite each other to rival the acts of their ancestors who fought at the Boyne.

After some remarks, in which Mr. Stephenson, of Emily, and Mr. Marshall, of Port Hope, sought to fasten a base slander on the Press of Peterboro, because, forsooth, they did not belch out the loyalty of the County of Victoria, who did not send any Volunteers to the front—the meeting broke up, all hastening to get to the trains in time. They were accompanied by the Peterboro brethern.

D. Hopkins, T. Chambers and George Johnston acted as Marshals during the day and to the satisfaction of all.

The day passed off very quietly, not any disturbance, and very little drinking considering the crowd present. May they all have many such celebrations for many years to come.

TROTTING RACE.

The Match between Mr. R. Robertson's (of St. Catherines) Bay Horse, Billy Button, and Mr. J. Peastr's (of Brighton) grey mare Lady Florence, came off on the Peterboro Course on Thursday, 12th inst., between 4 and 5 o'clock, p. m.

Lady Florence—2, 1, 1, 1.
Billy Button—1, 2, 2. 2.

The Race was for $500, and was well contested. The mare at the first heat showed great impatience, and in fact it was only in the last two heats she got down to her work; she is certainly able to do better than she did to-day. The time made was 3.15, 3.02, 3.10 and 3.05, which is nothing in these fast times to boast of.

The mare is matched to trot to-day, (Friday) at 4 o'clock, against Old Fenian, who is said to be a fast horse, for $200 on the same course.

That Resolution.

We have been in coversation with both the mover and seconder of the resolution, and they both distinctly affirm that they had no party or politics in view, their only desire being to express their ideas concerning the pay of volunteers in the present emergency. That they have received too high pay no one even insinuates, or imagines, every one believing they deserve more. Our own wish is that their services may not be again required, but if they should be, let them be properly paid. At the same time there should be system about it, every man should know what he is to receive, in all cases, and something like a system should be established. Ere long all may be required—our troubles are not all over yet.

From the Leader we learn that Henry H. Smith, son of Hon. S. Smith, of Peterboro, received a second class certificate at the Toronto Military School.

A violent thunder storm took place on Saturday afternoon last, at the City of Ottawa. The lightning struck Mathews' Hotel, doing considerable damage, two boarders narrowly escaping with their lives. Two men working close by, were knocked down and stunned with the shock.

Turkey is arming with a sort of terror, as if she felt that her hour was coming. A contingent of 25,000 troops has been furnished from Egypt. The Sultan wishes to occupy the principalities—but the Paris conference says no. The apprehension in England is that Turkey, fearing the Western Powers, will accept the protection of Russia, which will open the Eastern question once more, when war would rage from the Persian Gulf to the Straits of Gibraltar. If one only knew what it was all for! Men have fought for religion, for country, for liberty, and for conquest and glory! But the causes which threaten to involve the world in war at this moment are absurdly out of proportion to the war itself.

The Italian fleet is divided into three squadrons. The first, the battle squadron, consists of two first class and five second class frigates, all iron clad. The frigates are—Re de Italia (carrying Persano's flag,) Re di Portugallo, San Martino, Ahona, Maria Pia, Castelfidardo, Affondatore. The second squadron (subsidiary) commanded by Vice Admiral Albini, consists of the screw frigate Maria Adelaide (flag,) of six other first class screw frigates and four corvettes. The third squadron siege, Rear Admiral Vacca, comprises the second class ironclad, frigate Principe Carignano (flag) two gunboats and a corvette, also ironclad, and a despatch boat. A flotilla of six light vessels, gunboats and transports, is attached to Persano's division.

WHAT NEXT.

The Editor of the Review in his last issue in referring to the charges which we laid against him, tries to be witty? at our expense, but we can assure him that it will be a long time before his wit will entitle him to the noble distinction of Royal buffoon. His wit (like speech to the noble animal on which Balaam rode) is only imbued by the actions of one above him. Just as well might we try to be witty over the Dr., because Holloway's Pills, when prescribed, did not have the desired effect. But the two assertions in the Review:

June 29th, "what will be thought of our representative, who on the floor of the house of Parliament, seems to allow no opportunity to pass without disparaging the whole force, (meaning volunteer force) and even grumbling at the small pay of 25 cents a day which each private receives."

July 6th, "we never charged Col. Haultain with disparaging the Volunteers."

May we not justly in the words of the Roman procurator ask, "what is truth," after reading the above quotations from the Review of the above dates? But this is not his first "jump jim crow." The very nice paronomasy to which he afterwards treats his readers about volunteer system, volunteer organization, and volunteer force, will not free him from his very common position (in regard to us) of writing what a man who loved the truth would not dare write.

We need not go any farther back than the 29th ult. to prove our charge, although we could point to other occasions, if the importance of the matter demanded it, and the last rigmarole, about what he or those of whom he speaks think of the Colonel's course, is but a covert way of carrying out his old evil spirit of injustice to that gentleman, and of misrepresentation of his acts and motives.

THAT QUESTION.

The first insinuation of that truthful journal, under the caption "Queery," we do not in any way apply to ourselves. We take the side of truth, fairplay and reason, beyond this we unwittingly pass, if ever. We have a duty to a party to perform, nor will anything but the truth cause us to turn aside from that course.

For the information of our readers, however, we turn to the Ottawa Citizen of the 19th ult., and find the Colonel's speech, referred to, which is as follows, to the letter, and from it we leave our readers to draw their own conclusions:—

Mr. Haultain said it was a cause of surprise that more liberality was not shown to secure the settlement of wild lands in Upper Canada. No doubt there were many difficulties in the way. One arose from the vastness of the lumbering interest of this country. He held, however, there was no comparison between the agricultural and lumbering interests; the latter was diminishing year after year, whilst the former every year increased. He considered that the Government ought to reduce the price of wild lands or give them free to bonafide settlers. It was known that large lumbering firms are in possession of large tracts of valuable land, through putting down the names of men in their employ. Crown land agents ought faithfully to report all cases of this kind occurring in their respective neighbourhoods, and soon that sort of speculation would be put an end to. It is really a crying evil in some sections of Canada.

(From the Globe.)

Col. Haultain said there was a strong feeling through the country, so far as he had had an opportunity of becoming acquainted with it, in favor of lowering the price attached to public lands, and it was believed the result would be a largely increased immigration. No doubt there were great difficulties in connexion with this question, arising from an apparent clashing in this respect, of two most important interests of the country. Of these, the timber interest was of the very greatest importance at this time. But it should be remembered that every year must diminish the value of the lumber interest; while, on the other hand, every year increased the importance of settlement interest. We get a large revenue from the lumber trade, but that revenue must annually decrease. On the other hand, the more is carried on the settlement of the country, the larger would be our revenue and the more permanent would be its character. He conceived, therefore, there could be no comparison in importance between the two interests. He regretted that hitherto the lumbering interest had been wielding so much influence in this country as to prevent the settlement question being dealt with as liberally as its importance required. It must be said there was great difficulty in securing bona fide settlers. He knew there was, but this was very much owing to the want of vigilance and a want of integrity on the part of those employed as Crown Lands agents; and, so long as we had the system which now obtained for their payment, we could not expect to get first-rate men in that position. We should have as Crown Lands agents men whose whole time would be employed in attending to the progress of settlement. It was well-known that lumbering houses had obtained possession of large tracts of our wild lands by putting down their names for 100 acres here and 200 acres there, multiplying themselves in this way all over the country. These parties held the lands until they got the timber removed, and the value then was, of course, less to the actual settlers. If we had men of integrity as Crown Lands agents, this could not happen. If, whenever this occurred, the agents were watchful in making their reports, and the Department were faithful in carrying out their regulations, we would not have this injurious speculation in wild lands. There might be difficulties in devising and introducing the best possible system; but it was not much to our credit that a matter of so much importance should be laid aside for after years, and no action taken.

Now in these we fail to discover anything personal. We have also read his speech in other journals, and in none of them did we find anything such as the Review would insinuate. With what the member for this county said in parliament, however, we have nothing to do, except when we find him or any one else misrepresented, nor do we offer either apology or explanations. When land agents lie in our way we will say what we do know concerning them, and no more; and we would advise our contemporary to do so too, on all occasions. One thing is certain, and the effort of the Review, last week, proves it, that it takes a wise man to be witty, and the failure of the Review to be so is a standing proof of his being minus that qualification.

Mr. John Simpson has removed from Ashburnham, and refitted Armstrong's Hotel, corner of George and Hunter streets. The house is completely renewed, and from Mr. Simpson's obliging and agreeable manner travelers will find this a comfortable place to stop at.

One of the Fenian imprisoned at Montreal, and now removed to Bedford, C. E., was a soldier, drummed out of the 17th regiment at Halifax, for theft, was afterwards condemned to the Nova Scotia Penitentiary for larceny; and was pardoned out on condition of action as hangman, in the execution of the murders of Captain Benson. This ex-hangman and jailbird of course joined Sweeney, from pure love of Irish liberty? Not a doubt of it.—Freeman.

SCHOOL EXAMINATION.

In conformity with the ninth clause of the eighty-second section of the Upper Canada consolidated common school act, the semi-annual examination of school section, No. 14 Otonabee, taught by Mr. G. A. Mitchell, was held on the last week of June, when the pupils of the school were examined on paper in the several subjects which they have been taught during the term; and on Saturday of the said week a public examination was held, when the pupils of the school, present on said day, were publicly examined in their several subjects by the Rev. Mr. Cantlon, local superintendent, in the presence of the parents of the children and a goodly number of other visitors. The pupils which received prizes were as follows:—

How the Row Began.—Germany in its Confederate capacity began this controversy, which now threatens such alarming and disastrous results—"Execution" was decreed against the Duke of Holstein, and a Federal army marched into the Duchies with the design not only of expelling the King of Denmark from the Germanic province of Holstein, but of annexing also that territory the provinces of Schleswig, for the benefit of the state under its future Duke. But Prussia, though anxious to see the Duchies torn from Denmark, had not the least desire to see them included in the Confederation as an independent State. She wishes to incorporate them with her own territories for her private advantage, and so she took the work of "execution" out of the hands of the Federal troops and assumed it herself. Then Austria, discerning the intentions of her rival, claimed the right of co-operation, and in the end these two Great Powe s drove the armies of Denmark, first out of Holstein, and then out of Schleswig. But when this had been done the difficulties arose which have led to the present state of affairs. Prussia desires to appropriate the whole spoil, giving an indemnity to Austria in the shape of money. But Austria constantly refuses to take compensation for territory except in the form of territory, and Prussia could come to no terms with her. So as a provisional expedient for at least suspending the quarrel, the two Powers agreed to take a Duchy apiece under military occupation until something more conclusive could be arranged—Holstein going to Austria and Schleswig to Prussia. This was the convention of Gastein, still nominally binding on the two Powers, thus handicapped against the legitimate sufficiency of the Bund. As time, however, wore on, Prussia began to intimate her intentions of consummating the business in her own way. She scarcely disguised her determination to take and keep both the Duchies until at length Austria, enraged at her demonstrations and still more at the arrogance with which they were expressed, resolved in her turn rather to fight than yield, and began to arm in preparation for the conflict. It was only incidentally, and under the temptation presented by Austria's impending difficulties, that Italy, for purposes of her own, armed also. The original quarrel was, and is purely German.—Times.

Communications.

To the Editor of the Peterborough Examiner.

Sir,—My attention has been drawn to a resolution passed by the County Council, condemnatory of certain views said to have been expressed in Parliament relative to the militia policy of the Country. The Review, in publishing this reputation, accompanies it with such personal allusions as to insinuate that it had special reference to myself. The Review also publishes, very fairly, the remarks I am reported to have made on the occasion referred to, but I may well ask any intelligent man, not blinded by political bias, what connection there is between my remarks and the resolution of the Council. Also what foundation the Editor has for saying that I seem "to allow no opportunity to pass without disparaging the whole force and "even grumbling at the small pay of 25 cents a day, which the privates receive."

The resolution affirms "we do not regard the paltry sum of 25 cents per day as, in the least, excessive," and "we cannot fail to express surprise that an opposite view has been expressed on the floor of the house."

If any one will take the trouble carefully to read the remarks I made, he must in fairness, acknowledge that they do not directly or indirectly contain the views censured by the Council, as well as by the Review. I alluded to the general expense of one dollar and a quarter for each man employed, and I specified the 75 cents allowed for each private; I did not express, neither have I ever entertained, the opinion that 25 cents was too much to secure to the volunteer, over and above the expenses necessarily entailed for his board and lodging. I have always expressed the opposite opinion, and I am quite prepared to propose that, in addition to this sum, the wives and children of volunteers should have a reasonable allowance made to them.

I would mention, for the information of those who have not the means of knowing it, and also to enable them to form a just opinion of the few remarks I thought it my duty, in my place in parliament, to make, that the net pay (if I may so call it) of the volunteer was by no means always limited to the 75 cents a day. In some instances it was 30 cents, in others 40 and 45, and it even reached 75 cents a day without any deduction whatever.

I would further add, that in my remarks in parliament, which did not pretend to enter into any detailed consideration of the subject, no argument was based, nor upon the calling out temporarily or a certain number of men, more as a police force, to put down a marauding expedition, destitute of everything necessary for military operations, but upon the possible contingency of having to meet the invasion of a numerous, well-equipped, and enterprising enemy, possessing secure base of operations, and practically unlimited resources. I urged them, as I do now, and as I must continue to do, that our system is not suited for such an emergency, and that if we had to call to arms a hundred or a hundred and fifty thousand men, we would have to exercise greater economy than we are now doing, and that this economy should either now be practised, or else that there should be a clear and formal enunciation of the adoption of such a policy, when more serious circumstances call for it.

Let those who disagree with my opinions take my whole argument, and not fly off at a side issue. By neglecting to do this, they may not be combating my views, but those of their own creating.

The Review evidently endeavors to prejudice the members of the volunteer force against myself, in saying that I "allow no opportunity to pass without disparaging the whole force"—a reckless and an entirely untrue assertion. What are the fact? I took the earliest opportunity, viz.: during the debate on the address, to eulogise the universal readiness of the volunteers to respond to the call made upon them, and the gallantry manifested by a certain portion of the force. I have maintained their rights in parliament, and their ranks I have three times volunteered to enter. I pointed out the injustice of excluding volunteer officers from the commission of 1861-62, and strongly condemned the breach of faith of the Macdonald-Sicotte government towards them in 1863. In 1862 I spent some months and some money in organizing a volunteer field battery which was not recognised. I then offered to command a company of artillery, which should learn and perform all the duties of infantry, until required for the more special service, and this was ungraciously refused. And when in March last, there appeared need for my services, and I learnt that the government would res gnize another infantry company, I again offered my services, but without success. If the Editor of the Review will remember that I was offering to hold a rank in the Canadian militia very far below that to which I had attained in the British army, if not blinded by prejudice, or by ignorance of the most ordinary usages of military life, he would not accuse me of disparaging, or of entertaining hostility to the volunteer force.

A little impartial intelligence will see that I have ever drawn a wide distinction between the members of the volunteer force, and the system hitherto adopted for promoting the military efficiency of that force. The system has provided except in a few favored localities) only for drill by drill of an elementary character, to isolated fragments of the volunteer militia. To this I have ever maintained the most persistent opposition. Our exigencies, our enemies have obliged us to give a certain amount of advanced and continuous training to our volunteers. This has been done, not by our system, but in spite of it, and if I can judge of the opinions of the force generally, by those expressed to me by volunteer officers, with whom I have lately come in contact, there is not a man of them but would cordially support my views; and I can safely assure them, that the more experience they gain, the better they will be able to appreciate the efforts I have made, hitherto without success, to obtain for the force the training and organization required.

No one who has naturely considered in all its bearings, the defence of this country, will speak very dogmatically about it. The variety of opinions with regard to it is sufficient proof of the difficulties surrounding the subject The expense is the main element of difficulty with which we have to contend. much more than the difficulty of defence itself I would, therefore, urge upon the volunteers, not to imagine that they or their services are in any way or degree disparaged, when those, whose duty I is to consider and provide for all contingencies, should very carefully consider how they may best husband the country's resources—the very sinews of our defence. Let a comprehensive view be taken of all contingencies, and a wise consideration and forethought be given to them, I think there would then be no more sober preparation, and perhaps a little less self-glorification. At any rate it will lead to this conclusion, that it is not a subject, out of which, to make political capital. This leads me, although in danger of trespassing upon your space, to make a remark or two on the action of the County Council, before alluded to. I am quite sure that most will agree with me, that municipal councils were not instituted to discuss the proceedings of parliament, in matters not connected with the ordinary interests of their municipalities. I have heard some express the opinion that the meetings of the County Council are already unnecessarily prolonged, but if once it to admitted, that the votes and opinions of members of parliament, on the general policy of the country, are fair subjects for discussion by these bodies, then their sittings might be indefinitely extended.—But still more objectionable would be such a course, because infallibly introducing all the bitterness of party politics, in the discussion of matters and interests, from which politics should be rigorously excluded. Were such a course wise and legitimate for a County Council to adopt, there is no reason why the same should not be followed by every Township Council in the Province. However specious the pretext, yet not the thin edge of the political edge be introduced into our municipal bodies, to suit the purposes, and to further the projects of political aspirants.

To the electors alone do I hold myself responsible and look for censure or approval as regards my political course. I am quite prepared, as an election draws on, for increased activity on the part of the Review and other kindred spirits. It is the business of the former to criticise (in the past not over scrupulously) my words and actions, and I do not either expect or ask for quarter. Inadvertent words may be spoken in the hurry of business or heat of debate, but I read by admit the responsibility of a public man in every such case. From my friends, however, I may claim to be judged by my whole course and character, and to those who know me best, I confidently appeal, when I claim to have been actuated by an earnest desire to know and to do faithfully and impartially, that which duty required of me, without regard to personal considerations or personal predilections. My only regret is that I may have too often failed, and that I possessed not higher qualifications for the important and responsible duties of my position.

Your obedient servant,
FRED. W. HAULTAIN.

NOTES BY A TRAVELLER.

Passing from New Brunswick to Canada West by steamer and railway, he came to an indifferent observer, and chanced to see that is interesting, not to note many things worthy of record.

In the comparatively smart, but enterprising Province first mentioned, the recent general election returned an overwhelming majority of Confederate members; no less than 33 out of 41; and, if the 8 "anties" had accompanied the writer on his recent tower, their objectionable reasons for opposition would have been swept away by waving corn fields, and prosperous hamlets, towns, and cities.

It is no disparagement to New Brunswick to say, that the grass and cereals in many parts of the state of Maine are far in advance of theirs here; and it is not detracting from that eastern state to affirm, that in anada, the grass, cereal and grain crops, very far excel any and all in Maine.

We feel justified in thus remarking on the comparative qualities of the respective places spoken of—and to borrow a sentiment from the Queen of Sheba—"the half has not been told," redounding as it would, to the credit of Canada.

THE BURNING OF PORTLAND.

Arriving at Portland on last Friday morning, the smoke and heat of the great conflagration which began on the Fourth, and only ended on the evening preceding the sixth, told of the dire work of destruction. It was ascertained, so the writer was informed, to have originated by a boy setting off "Firecrackers" among dry chips at a cooper's shop, which becoming ignited, and the wind blowing furiously, the demon spirit of fire rode on unconquered and unconquerable, like a destroying fury, until the merciful interposition of providence declared—"thus far hast thou come—but, here shall thy devastating flames be stayed." It was enough to satisfy, even the spirit of destruction—over 250 acres of the late beautiful city of Portland was left a charred and smoking wreck! Not even the waves of fire which once rolled over the proud city of Moscow could boast of destroying, marring, and rendering a blighted waste of so much beauty, as did the ocean flame in Portland on the "Glorious Fourth!" All the "Banks," Custom House, Printing Offices, and upwards of 1500 houses were swept away—nothing remaining but stacks of chimnies, standing like grim sentinels keeping watch over the charnel house of ruin! The glory of Portland has departed—the lovely shade trees, and umbrageous shrubbery which adorned and beautified it—until it became as noted for its beauty as Palmyra in the wilderness, have gone—and the present generation will never see it, as late it was.

The feeling of the Portlanders against "Firecrackers" is of the most intense hate, and woe be unto the reckless hand that ignites one of them in that city.

SCARCITY OF BREAD.

So short of food was the city on Friday morning last, that scores of people with their pockets full of "greenbacks" had to live on empty stomachs. The writer of this article applied to the keeper of the G. T. R. Depot Saloon for breakfast; stating at the time that, he had just landed from the st amer "City of Richmond;" but, instead of being directed to "take a seat" at the refreshment table, he was anxiously requested to return to the steamer, and solicit the Captain or Steward to spare him a few loaves of bread, for which he would pay any price! Hunger must be satisfied if possible, and away we went on our mission of mercy—but the "City of Richmond" had no bread to spare—the circumstance bringing vividly to recollection the history of the "City of Richmond" during one period of the late Southern War, when—"no bread," was the prevailing wail!

THE "ISLAND POND" OFFICER.

The "Custom House Officer," as a kind of stupid gent dubs himself at "Island Pond," committed a blunder on Friday, by which a gentleman had to return some 20 miles in the down train to get three trunks belonging to three ladies. Such conduct in officials is very annoying, and travellers too often look et such grievances quietly; but an occasional expose may have a salutary effect.

THE BOOT BLACK.

"Poor Paddy" is often accused of perpetrating egregious blunders; and many things ascribed to him read so ludicrously fictitious that they are put down as bulls that never grazed on the bounds of probability; but the "Boot-Black" at the "Montreal House," in that glittering city is a living testimony that "Paddy" is unequalled in blundering.

THE EVIDENCE:—On Friday night last, at half-past ten, Paddy was directed by the Book-keeper to take a lamp and guide us to resting quarters—this he did, most admirably—but after we had locked ourself in and Paddy out a knock caused the bolt to go back, and Paddy, very demurely asks, "shall I black your boots—sur?" Certainly, my good fellow, but they are not required till morning. Again the door is locked, and "tired nature's sweet restorer," soon rocked us in the cradle of Morpheus. Morning came and "up and dressed"—all but the boots—a half hour—no Paddy—no boots—borrowing a pair we descended the stairs in quest of boots and boot-black—neither to be seen—landlord at his post—directed us to Paddy—"I want my boots"—demure Paddy handed us a pair—one with a high heel, the other low. These are not mine. "Faith, sur, the boots are mates." Landlord looks at him—"Yes sir, they are mates"—and perhaps one of your legs are shorter than the other." That was "the severest cut of all." No sir, I was born even legged, and remain so—they are not my boots. Away went Paddy in search of the pair proper; we followed him up, and up; on, and on—at length the owner discovered his boots; numbered "57," and snugly put to a gent's room door, but minus the professional's polish! Such is Paddy of the brush at the "Montreal House." We recommend travellers "putting up" there, to watch Paddy and his boots—or, he may be accused of having legs—one shorter than the other; and owning boots—one, high heeled—the other low.

The recital of this little circumstance may not be regarded as requisite in newspaper correspondence—we think differently—the traveller needs information on every thing connected with his convenience and comfort; and to the avoidance of all calculated to give him annoyance—and the "Press" being the universal medium of conveying such information; perhaps more than one traveller may have reason to thank the Editor of the Peterboro' Examiner for giving publicity to the sketch of Paddy the boot-black—the Island Pond Officer, &c., &c.—From the pen of a New Brunswicker.

THE BEAUTIFUL FIELDS.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—Permit me, through the columns of the Examiner, to give a brief sketch of a trip to the pleasant little village of Keene On Saturday last, I accepted the offer of a friend to take a ride to the place, and found it one of the pleasantest and most agreeable I have had for a long time. The fields are now in the deepest green, excepting a few which are completely covered with mustard, a fact which does not speak well for the owners. With these exceptions the green fields of Otonabee would now compare favorably with the fields of even the Emerald Isle itself. The crops promise to be above average—even superabundant. The fall wheat will be found, I think, better than anticipated, and the spring crops exceed, in appearance, anything I have gazed upon for many years.—The great author of all good has been sending his gentle showers upon all classes, as there appears to be but little difference in the prospects of any. When we arrived at the place of our destination, we found that Mr. John Gall had an extensive sale of horses, furniture, &c., and that our Townsman, Mr. C. Stapleton, was the great Auctioneer. May I say we listened to his oft repeated going! going! gone! gone, for some time, when our duties called us to other scenes. on hearing that Mr. Gall was about to retire from the Victoria House, (for that is the name of the hotel which he is Proprietor of,) I made enquiry, and was told that he was only disposing of his old stock, with the intention of replenishing the larder with new. Any one visiting Keene, will find this a good hotel to put up at, the table as good as any in the country, and the landlord obliging.

Thanking you Mr. Editor, for the space of this letter.

I am, Sir,
Yours respectfully,
A TRAVELLER.

THE LOCAL LEGISLATURES.

THE RESOLUTIONS TO BE MOVED.

OTTAWA, July 9

The following are the resolutions to be moved providing for the joint Governments and Legislatures of Lower and Upper Canada, respectively, when the union of the Provinces of British North America is effected:

Resolved,—1st That by the 30 h paragraph of the resolutions of this House, passed on the 3rd day of February, 1865, for presenting an humble address to Her Majesty, praying that she may be graciously pleased to cause a measure to be submitted to the Imperial Parliament for the purpose of uniting the colonies—Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island in one Government, with provisions based on the resolutions which were adopted at a conference of delegates from the said colonies, held in the city of Quebec on the 10th of October, 1864; it is provided that for each of the Provinces there shall be an executive officer styled Lieut.-Governor, who shall be appointed by the Governor General in Council under the seal of the federated provinces during pleasure; such pleasure not to be exercised before the expiration of the first five years, except for cause; such cause to be communicated in writing to the Lieutenant Governor immediately after the exercise of the pleasure as aforesaid, and also by message to both houses of Parliament within the first week of the first session afterwards; and that by the 41st paragraph of the same resolution, it is provided that the local government and legislature of each province shall be constructed in such a manner as the existing legislature of each province shall provide.

2nd. That under and subject to the constitution of the federated provinces, the executive authority of the Lieutenant-Governors of Lower Canada and Upper Canada respectively, shall be administered by each of such officers according to the well understood principles of the British constitution

THE DREAM OF HOME.

I loitered down the shady way
That ends beside the spring,
The mossy stones and drops at play
Kept up a mullied ring.

The stream went trickling down the dell
With sound of dreary rain;
The swaying tree-tops wove their spell—
I was at home again.

The sunset's pleasant ruddiness
Was on the gray old barn;
The careless winds went rudderless
Through the long roads of corn.

The heavy grass upon the hill
Was rippling in the breeze;
The daisies hurried 'gainst their will,
Like mermaids under seas.

The little rush-encircled pond,
Looked just as dear and fair
As when it greened the castle ground
I builded in the air.

Upon the meadow brooklet's brink,
Stood brother Freddie a mill;
I paused a little while to think—
The mill and heart were still.

The crosses of two weary years
Have clogged its rattling song;
The brook, as if its source was tears,
Crept silently along.

I lingered yet along the ways,
In happiest hours I'd known,
And caught the first star's trembling rays,
And marked the old pine's moan.

Then hurried up the grassy walk,
And stood within the hall—
A murmur as of pleasant talk
Comes through the parting wall.

I sought the cushioned corner chair
Where idle hours were whiled:
'Twas nothing strange to see me there—
My mother looked and smiled.

And little Nannie's roguish laugh
Rang out so full and free,
When, leaning with silken scarf,
She chanced to capture me.

The flowers I'd traded only seemed
To know I was a guest:—
The flowers in childhood I had gleaned
As loviest and best.

But both, as if 'twould be less kind
To boast their sweet intent,
On salver of the silent wind
Their welcomings were sent.

How wintry seemed the brooklet's flow!
How wrong its babbling way!
That dared to mock at 'long ago,'
And woke me to 'to-day!'

Yet in the hour of loneliness,
What memory can come
With soothing half so sweet as this
My simple dream of home?

After a Fenian

A gentleman relates a good story of his experience on the field of battle of Limeridge. A few days after the skirmish he was surveying the scene of operations from his waggon, when a gaunt, queer visaged man approached him, and said:—

'Stranger, this moughtn't be the battle field, mout it, sir?'

'Yes, sir,' replied the gentleman very politely.'

'Wall, neow, will you tell me what that might be?'

'That, I believe,' replied he again, 'is the grave of a Fenian who was shot in the late skirmish.'

'Gosh all hemlock, yer don't say so.—Look a here, stranger, I've rum all the way from hum to git a Fenian to send to the Mooseum in London, and wood feel mighti y obleeged to yer if yer would lend me yer hoss and waggon to carry the cuss to the village arter I dig him up.'

'Well, really, Muster,' was the reply, 'I should very much like to accommodate you but I cannot do so just now.'

'Oh, neow, stranger, don't be so ungenerous, let's hev yer waggon and hoss, and I'll treat yer when we git to the taveran.'

The gentleman still refused to let him have the full rig, but agreed to lend him the horse if he would go to the village of Ridgeway and borrow a waggon. This proposition didn't meet with approval, for the other replied:

'I'll be dod rot, if it ain't too bad—Here I've been a tellin' on Polly that she should hev a ded Fenian to preserve fur to send hum to the London Mooseum, and I'll hev one. Ef I can't get a bull one, I'll take the hed anyway, so here goes!'

And the gaunt man immediately pulled off his coat and went to work excavating the grave, at which operation the gentleman left him having no doubt that if a Fenian was located in it, the body would be exhumed, and if not carried away entire, part would be at any rate.

The Advantage of Security

Some weeks ago, I strolled into a friend's counting room. He being absent, I commenced a chat with his clerk, when a good looking 'cullud pussun' entered, doffed his castor, and said—

'Mas. Bob, can you len me a quarter till dis arternoon, and I pay him sartain?'

'Mas. Bob' applied his dexter to his vest pocket, but it made 'no sign.'

'Well,' said I, 'you look tolerably honest, but as I don't know you, if you will give me security, I'll lend you the quarter.'

His eye brightened as he asked—

'Mas. Bob, will you go my security?'

'Yes,' replied Bob.

I forked over. Some time afterwards, as I was about to enter the office, the identical old fellow stood before me.

'Where's my quarter? You didn't pay me as you promised.'

'No sah; but I gif you security.'

'Well, but you are to pay me—I lent you the quarter.'

'Dat's true, sah, but it am de custom down here to hannt the security fust.'

Who had a Hand in It?

In one of the public schools in Philadelphia, a few hours exemption from study had greatly enlarged the bump of trickery in the upper stories of some of the young 'ideas,' as that they smeared the balustrades from top to bottom with tar, and when the master came in he naturally laid his hand on it when he mounted up the stairs. When all the scholars had taken their seats, he then informed them of what had been done, and offered to give five dollars to any who would tell him who had a hand in it.

At this moment up jumped a little urchin who said—

'Does you say that you'll give any one $5 who'll tell you who had a hand in it?'

'Yes.'

'Now, thir, you'll not whip me, will you, if I tell?'

'No.'

'Well, thir, y—, now, you won't whip me?'

'You young scamp, I'll whip you if you don't tell pretty soon.'

'Well thir, you had a hand in it?'

The master had to give in, and hand over the $5.

Dr. T. C. CULVER'S MEDICAL DISPENSARY,

Over 139 King St. East,

TORONTO.

For the cure of

CHRONIC AND SECRET DISEASES!

And all Female Complaints.

UNFORTUNATES READ.

YOUNG MEN WHO ARE TROUBLED with weakness generally, caused by a bad habit in youth—which produces constitutional debility, you can rely on our remedies, for we have treated over fifty thousand patients, and we guarantee a perfect cure in all cases.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES.

Our PERIODICAL DROPS will bring on the monthly sickness in cases of obstruction from any cause, and after all other remedies of the kind have been tried in vain

NEW REMEDIES AND QUICK CURES.—For Syphilis stictures, seminal weakness, pains in the joints, affections of the kidneys, diseases of the head, throat, nose and skin, and all those dreadful affections arising from a secret habit of youth, which produces constitutional debility, renders marriage impossible, and in the end destroys both body and mind, the treatment we adopt is the result of upwards of thirty years experience and successful practice in Europe and America.

Address Dr. T. C. CULVER, 139 King Street East, Toronto, C. W.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A fullest delight. Superior to any Cologne, used to bathe the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headache, &c. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and has obtained a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with nurseries and opera singers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by Demas Barnes & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

"Jest so!"—"Exactly!"—Solon Shingle said; they were there "every time." If he felt "sorry" in the morning, he took Plantation Bitters; if he felt weary at night, he took Plantation Bitters; if he looked appetite, was weak, languid or in any way oppressed, he took Plantation Bitters; and they never failed to set him on his pins again and firm.

Few persons want any better authority; but as some may, just read the following:

" " " " I owe much to you, for I verily believe the Plantation Bitters have saved my life.

REV. W. H. WAGONER, Madrid, N. Y."

" " " " I have been a great sufferer from Dyspepsia, and had to abandon preaching. " " The Plantation Bitters have cured me

REV. C. A. MILLWOOD, New York City.

" " " " I had lost all appetite—was so weak and enervated I could hardly walk, and had a perfect dread of society. " " " The Plantation Bitters have set me all right.

JAMES HEIMWAY, St. Louis, Mo."

" " " " The Plantation Bitters have cured me of a derangement of the Kidneys and Urinary Organs, that distressed me for years. They act like a charm.

C. C. MOORE, 256 Broadway, N. Y."

Mrs. O. M. DRYOE, manager of the Union Home School for Soldiers' Children, says she "has given it to the weak and invalid children under her charge, with the most happy and gratifying results." "We have received over a hundred reams of such certificates, but no advertisement is so effective as what people themselves say of a good article. Our fortune and our reputation is at stake. The original quality and high character of these goods will be sustained under every and all circumstances. They have already obtained a sale in every town, village, par sh and hamlet among civilized nations. Base imitators try to come as near our name and style as they can, and because a good article cannot be sold as low as a poor one, they find some au pert from parties who do not care what they sell. Be on your guard. See our private stamp over the cork.

Over a Million Dollars Saved!

Gentleman:—"I had a negro man worth $1,200 who took cold from a bad hurt in the leg, and was useless for over a year. I had used everything I could hear of without benefit, until I tried the Mexican Mustang Liniment.—It soon effected a permanent cure."

J. D. DOWNING.

Montgomery, Ala., June 17, 1859.

"I take pleasure in recommending the Mexican Mustang Liniment as a valuable and indispensible article for Sprains, Sores, Scratches or Galls on Horses. Our men all say it acts like magic."

J. W. HEWITT,
Foreman for America, Wells, Fargo's and Harnden's Express

"The Sprain of my daughters ankle, occasioned while skating last winter, was entirely cured in one week, after she commenced using your celebrated Mustang Liniment.

ED. NEELY."

Gloucester, Mass., Aug. 1, 1865.

It is an admitted fact that the Mexican Mustang Liniment performs more cures in shorter time, on man and beast, than any article ever discovered. Families, livery-men and painters should always have it on hand. Quick and sure it certainly is. All genuine is wrapped in steel-plate engravings, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook Chemist, and the private U. S. stamp of Demas Barnes & Co over the top.

An effort has been made to counterfeit it with a cheap stone plate label. Look closely!

Who would not be beautiful? Who would not add to their beauty? What gives that marble purity and distingue appearance we observe upon the stage, and in the city belle? It is no longer a secret They use Hagan's Magnolia Balm. Its continued use removes tan, freckles, pimples and roughness, from the face and hands, and leaves the complexion smooth, transparent, blooming and ravishing. Unlike many cosmetics, it contains no material injurious to the skin. Any Druggists will order it for you, if not on hand, at 5 cts per bottle.

Helmstreet's Inimitable Hair Coloring is not a dye. All instantaneous dyes are composed of lunar caustic, and more or less destroy the vitality and beauty of the hair. This is the original hair Coloring, and has been growing in favor over twenty years It restores gray hair to its original color by gradual absorption, in a most remarkable manner. It is also a beautiful hair dressing. Sold in two sizes—50 cents and $1—by all dealers.

Poetry.

NOTHING MORE.

In a valley far I wended
O'er the meadow pathway green,
Where the singing brook was flowing,
Like the spirit of the stream;
And I saw a lovely maiden,
With a basket brimming o'er
With sweet buds and so I asked her,
For a flower and nothing more.

Then I chatted on beside her,
And I gazed her cool eyes,
And like the roses from her basket,
On her cheek new blushes rise;
With her timid looks down glancing could she would just pass before,
But I said that all I wanted,
Was a smile and nothing more.

So she shily smiled upon me,
And I still kept wandering on,
What with blushing, smiling chatting,
Soon a bit I half hour was gone;
Then she told me I must leave her,
For she saw her cottage door,
But I could not till I rifled,
Just a kiss, and nothing more.

And I often met a maiden,
At the twilight's loving hour,
With the summer's off spring laden,
But herself the dearest flower;
And she asked me what I wished for?
Growing bolder than before,
With impassioned words I answered,
'Twas herself and nothing more.

Thus for weeks and months I wooed her,
And the joys that then had birth,
Made an atmosphere of gladness,
Seemed encircling all the earth;
One bright morning at the altar,
A white bridal dress she wore,
Then my wife I proudly made her,
And I asked for nothing more.

Literature.

The Spy System of Europe.

In Austria every spy is a spy and nothing else. Whatever character he may assume, he feels the hand that moves him, he obeys with a dogged determination that renders him a mere machine—a creature having no wish or will beyond its duty.—The number of spies in actual employ in Francis Joseph's dominions is enormous—so numerous that it has been said 'every other Austrian is a detective, and all the rest are informers.' In Prussia it is the same. From Vienna to Berlin are just from one German city to another—a bits, manners, customs, laws courts issue, all seem the same.

To illustrate this secret adjunct of power and to show how it is made to contribute to the State's safety, we may repeat the story of a young English tourist. We were discussing the question as to what European monarch belonged the credit of having the best spy organization, when he related his experience in that line.

I had, he went on to say, rambled over Prussia with merely an idle traveler's curiosity, subject meanwhile to all kinds of petty annoyance, when at least I reached Berlin, where I resolved to remain and await a remittance from my banker in London, my funds having suddenly run short, by reason of my purchasing a large diamond which had been offered me at a very tempting price. I selecting a hotel of the second class, and established myself very comfortably, having, as I believed, about funds enough to meet my expense until more should arrive.

I had been in Berlin, perhaps a week, visiting various place of amusement and curiously, when one morning, after having been engaged in poring over an English paper till a late hour, I relighted a half smoked cigar, and sallied forth for a brisk walk.

I had not gone a hundred paces before I found a sentry's musket at my breast, and heard the ominous words;

'Sir, I arrest you in the Kings name!'

'What for?' I demanded. 'What have I done?'

'Broken the laws,' replied the fellow with infinite coolness, at the same time rudely tapping my cigar with his musket.

'Broken what law?'

'The law against smoking.'

'Is a gentleman not allowed to smoke in Prussia?'

'Not in the street, sir.'

'Well, confound your laws,' cried I rather sharply. 'I have been constantly annoyed by some miserable petty enactment like this, ever since I first set foot in this country.'

This was not a very polite speech for a stranger to make in any country, least of all for a man under arrest in this land of despotism.

'Forward! march!' said the sentry, indicating with his musket which way I was to go.

'Take me to your superior then, and let me settle this matter at once,' said I with an air, supposing the whole thing would result in a pretty round fine.

The sentry called me with a civil bow

'Fined for smoking in the street, I suppose,' I said in a sort of explanatory way.

The sentry whispered a few words in his ear.

'You must pass the night in the guard-house,' said the officer turning to me.

Pshaw!' said I, 'you only jesting; come, what is the fine?'

'How long have you been in Prussia?' asked the officer.

'About eight months,' I answered.

'And you have yet to discover that officers of justice in this country are not in the habit of jesting with affairs of State!'

'Oh, then, smoking a cigar in the street is an affair of State in Prussia, is it?' said I in an ironical tone.

The officer frowned and hit his lip, but made no reply.

We reached the guard house in silence.

'Surely not in there!' said I, as my conductor threw open the door of a damp, filthy cell.

'Enter!' was the stern response.

I did so, and was left to pass the night as best I could.

Early the next morning, I was hurried off to the police office, and found myself among a crowd of miserable wretches who had been arrested during the night for various crimes, and were huddled together there to await examination. As I was the only well dressed person of the party, and had been brought here for a slight irregularity, I naturally expected my turn would come first.

I was mistaken; perhaps it was the design of the authorities to humble me still further. At all events, one after another of my companions were led off and disposed of until I was left alone. I was vexed and at the same time a little alarmed.—Perhaps the whistle affair was going to turn out a good deal more serious than I had considered possible—it had already done so—and I might be for from through with it yet. I had committed no crime, it is true; in fact, I had done nothing to merit the disgrace and punishment I had already received. But I knew enough of the arbitrary power of despotism to make me feel not a little concerned, and to regret in some measure my hasty and passionate words.

At length I was summoned into a small, narrow room divided by a bar, behind which sat a man with one eye, a large scar across his left cheek, and whose sardonic expression of countenance would certainly have kept me from selecting him for a bosom companion. With his one eye he took a quick, sharp survey of my face, and then in a squeaking voice, demanded my name.

'Richard Beresford.'

He turned and fumbled over a pile of papers, and at length drew out one which I recognized as my passport.

'Hum! an Englishman!' he muttered with an expression that showed he had no liking for the nation.

He then referred to a large book which lay open on his desk beside him and after examining it a few minutes, said in the same squeaking voice:

'This matter is serious and must be decided by higher authority'

'And all this grows out of simply smoking a cigar in the street, does it?' said I in a tone which betrayed some of the irritation I felt.

'You will see, sir!' was the short, surly rejoinder of the one-eyed functionary who held the office of Inspector of Police.

I could not resist the temptation to reply, notwithstanding I knew it would do me more harm than good.

'Well,' said I; 'if I am to be kept in durance much longer, I hope I shall be furnished with something to eat, or allowed to procure it myself, for I have no desire to be starved to death for nothing.'

To this the inspector did not even condescend a reply, but taking up a printed blank he filled it out and handed it to my conductor or guard, who immediately tapped me on the shoulder, and told me to follow him. We left the room by a door opposite to the one by which we entered. Hearing a step behind me, I looked back and discovered a soldier with a musket, following just one pace behind me. For the first time I really trembled. All this caution and care meant so nothing; perhaps I was to be immured in a dungeon. I had not done anything—but what of that? I was in the power of men who might deal harshly with me, and what redress would I have—what means of escape from their clutches? I might also die in a dungeon. Politically speaking, the English government was bound to see me have my rights; but getting redress for a wrong by government interference is a slow process at best, and I was not in the least consoled by thinking of it at the time.

After being led through a long, narrow passage, I was conducted into another small dingy room, on the door of which was painted, 'Department of Arrests.' In this department were three men, two of them weighting at desks behind the bar, the third, a little, grim old man was busily poring over what seemed to be an official document. This third personage, who was in reality the great Mogul of the place, did not deign to lift his eyes from the manuscript in his hand or even so much as glance at my inferior self, but kept on reading and occasionally making notes for more than an hour, at the end of which time he got up and went out, and was gone at least two hours more, I being all the time kept standing and waiting in the most anxious suspense. In Prussia, however, a prisoner can wait—who cares!

At last the little, grim old man came shuffling back to his place, and having adjusted his spectacles, signified that he was ready for any new case, which in this instance happened to be mine.

'The prisoner will step up close to the bar,' said the old man in a cracked and grating tone.

'What is your name?' was his first question.

'Richard Beresford.'

'What country?'

'England.'

'Your age?'

'Twenty-six.'

'Your profession or occupation?'

'Gentleman.'

'What do you mean by gentleman?' and he peered at me sharply over his spectacles.

I was tempted to reply by asking him if they had no such personages in Prussia; but I refrained, knowing that my sharp answer would react upon myself.

'In England,' I said in a very civil tone, 'a gentleman is a person of good family and education, who has the means to live without any particular business.'

'Ah, I see,' he rejoined with a sneer. 'Have you parents?'

'I have.'

'Where does your father live?'

'A few miles from London.'

'What is his business?'

'He lives on his income.'

'Umph! Well, sir, how long have you been in Prussia?'

'About eight months.'

'Where have you been since entering the kingdom?'

I named the places I had visited in regular order.

'You mention Dessau,' he said, making reference to his books. 'When were you there?'

'Last month.'

'How long were you there?'

'I do not remember the number of days.'

'I will tell you—five. You stopped at the White House, a not over respectable inn. You rose late and went to bed late, and you spent your time in rambling about in an idle way—smoking cigars and sometimes cavorting at things which did not suit you. You see we have it all here,' he added, tapping his book. 'Now then, you left Dessau and went to Wittenberg.'

'I did.'

'How long were you there?'

'A week or two.'

'A vague, unsatisfactory answer. You were just two weeks and one day. What did you do there?'

'About the same as at Dessau.'

'What did you there different from any other place where you stopped in the Kingdom?' 'I do not remember.'

'No? Then your memory is not worth much. I will tell you. You purchased a diamond of a small dark man, for less than its real value.'

I started in surprise. Was every movement, every act, I might almost say every thought of mine since entering the confines of Prussia, known to the police. It seemed so.

'Why did you purchase that diamond for less than its real value?'

'Because the owner offered to sell it at a tempting price,' I answered, wondering what was to grow out of this.

'The owner, you say? How did you know who the owner was?'

'I supposed of course that it belonged to the man that sold it.

'Rightfully?

'Yes, sir.'

'Then why do you suppose that he would sell it under its real value?'

'Because he said he was anxious to raise ready money.'

'Did you not think that the diamond was stolen?'

'I had no reason to think so from the price. It is natural for persons to offer jewels, or anything else, in fact, for less than their real value, when anxious to raise the ready money.'

'Yes, and a thief will sell for less than the real owner?'

'Undoubtedly.'

'You only paid about three-fourths the worth of that diamond; this should have made you suspicious. In fact you were. You believed that diamond to have been stolen, if you did not indeed know it. And you were right. It was stolen. It belongs to a set owned by Count Esterbury.—Where is it now?'

I produced it with a good deal of tremulous misgiving. It had cost me a thousand pounds—a good deal too much to lose. The old man took it and examined it with avaricious eyes.

'Of course, this having been stolen, is forfeited,' he said. 'The only question is whether you as the receiver ought not to be held equally guilty with the thief, who has already been arrested, tried, convicted and condemned. All things considered, however, I have decided to let you go. You are fined five dollars for smoking in the street. Pay that, sir, and beware how you again fall into the hands of the police.'

'And am I to lose my diamond, and the thousand pounds I paid for it?' said I, hardly able to keep down my anger. 'You may thank me, sir, that you got off thus easily under the circumstances!' said the old man, throwing up his spectacles.—'This matter shall not rest here though!' said I, as I laid down my fine and turned to go.

'No threats to the officers of this government, if you please!' said the grim old man, with a look that made my flesh creep; 'or you pass from here to the dungeon at once! You have already said enough since your arrest to put you where your friends could not find you; and if I hear another word of insolence, you shall go there! Take my advice, young man, keep your tongue close in Prussia, and leave the Kingdom as soon as you can.' I did; and if ever they catch me in that region again, the thieves shall have the liberty to rob me of another thousand pounds! exclaimed the narrator, as he flung his cigar from his lips with an energy that proved that the memory of Berlin was not a pleasant.

The Anniversary of Solferino.

(From the London Standard, June 26.)

Did the Italians fight better on the 7th anniversary of Solferino, and was the day and the place chosen by their leaders because the troops were likely to be inspired by the intoxicating memory of a struggle which has made Italy what she is? Were they instigated by that respect for luck that superstitious belief in chances favorable or adverse, which drives Italians in crowds to chose the same number in a lottery? Their anniversary has not been blessed, and their luck has played them false. Did the Austrians, again, fight better on St. John's day because they felt that it became them to wipe out an immerited disgrace, because they burned to reverse that verdict which, malair as it was, would go down in history unless blotted out with their blood? Did they feel, too, that whatever may have been the case in 1859, their cause this time was a just one, the cause of right against wrong, of a peaceful people against a host of wanton aggressors, that they were fighting not for Venice only, but for their beloved country of Austria against a world in arms? Or did they hold that rough and rude forth of Napoleon, that Providence is generally on the side of the strongest battalions? Then, perhaps, was the confidence of their generals when they looked on the King of Italy crossing the Mincio with 100,000 men, and putting the flower of his army in the lion's mouth of the Quadrilatera. The more sentimental feeling may have made the heart of the common soldier leap for joy when he encountered once more the old defiant foes whom he had never met yet in equal fight—that he, the ragged Croat, the calm Bohemian, the chivalrous Hungarian, was face to face with the Italian invader on Austrian soil.

THAT LITTLE OLD MAID.

'Oh, Aunt Fanny, how lovely! Are they for Laura, or for me?' The speaker, a pretty but rather an indolent looking blonde, held up, as she spoke, a cluster of fine gold ornaments for the hair, a sprig of wheat and striped grass, very graceful and pretty.

'Where have you kept them hidden?'

'They were a keep-sake from an old friend, and have been among my treasures for thirteen years, Bertha,' was the reply.

'But now they are for me,' said the young girl, caressingly. 'They will be so lovely for to-morrow evening, and I must look my best, for the girls will all don their most fascinating attire in honor of the occasion.

'Is it not rather marked to be so very common?' inquired her aunt. 'In my young days, ladies waited to be sought and courted; but, to judge from what you have told me, the hero of yours may have any one in Silverdale for asking.'

'Well, he won't know it,' replied Bertha. 'And, Aunt Fanny, he really is worth courting; he is so very rich.'

'Is that all that is required, Bertha, in a husband?' said her aunt, seriously.

'Well, it is the main thing, anyhow, now-a-days,' replied Bertha. 'But Lawrence Lane has more than riches. Before he went abroad, report says, he was one of the most talented men of the day; and that old Methodist, Lucy Harding, always speaks of him as a 'true Christian gentleman;' so I suppose he adds charity to the best of attractions; for she is not lavish of praise except on those who are willing to assist her.'

'A true Christian gentleman!' Aunt Fanny repeated the phrase in a musing tone while a soft light came into her dark eyes, and a smile hovered over her lips. Bertha seeing that the gold ornaments were not to decorate her hair, went off singing, while, with tender touch, Aunt Fanny replaced her treasures in her jewel case.

The next evening Laura and Bertha, in fleecy white robes, with blush roses and other delicate flowers in their hair, and looping the lace folds here and there, stood before the long mirror in the drawing-room, posing.

'I can't see what she wants to go for,' said Laura, petulantly. 'She hasn't been to a party since ma died, and that's ten years ago—the little old maid!'

'I wonder if she's going husband-hunting at her age!' said Bertha. 'Why, she's thirty, if she is a day,' and the beauty of eighteen shook her curls contemptuously at the idea of such an advanced age being attractive.

In the meantime the object of their ill natured remarks, the gentle aunt, who for ten years had filled a mother's place to these, her sister's children, waited in her own room for her nieces. She had clad her small slight figure in a black silk, the severe simplicity of which was relieved by rich falls of black lace, delicately embroidered with golden clusters of wheat. Her round white arms and throat were not decked with jewels, but in the braids of black hair gleamed the golden ornaments which the little old maid had cherished for thirteen years. She was not beautiful, yet there was a charm in her sweet face, a grace in her gentle movements, and a music in her voice that were sought in vain in her more dashing nieces. As she waited, her eyes rested upon a letter, discolored and worn, which had been long hidden under her treasured ornaments, and she read—

'DEAR FRANCES.—Since you will not disobey your father, and I cannot command the sum he demands to pay my late father's debt to him, we must part—part for a time only; for though seas roll between us, and we may not write, your heart and mine can never be wholly severed. Trust me—trust me, darling! for, though years may elapse, I will return, true to my pledge to you. Will you keep the little gold sprigs I ventured to offer on your birthday, that something of mine may be yours? Oh, my darling, how I linger, dreading to write farewell! But it must be done. Your resolution, never to marry clandestinely commands my respect, as your gentle sweetness has long ago won my love.—Heaven guard you, and keep you from further sorrow! Till we meet, pray for

'LAWRENCE.'

It was a brilliant party that Mrs. Haskins, the leader of fashion in Silverdale, gave to her returned nephew. He had left home struggling against fortune, and depressed with a knowledge of his father's large debts. Vainly striving to pay these, he had lived close, dressed with economy, and been well known as one upon whom the iron hand of poverty rested heavily. No farewell party had been given when he announced his intention of seeking his fortune in a foreign land. His relatives were rather glad to be rid of him; and, of all Silverdale, but one heart had ached for his loss, but one voice sent forth prayers for his safety, but one of all his friends watched for his return. No word had come to any, till a letter to his aunt announced him after thirteen years' sojourn in Australia.—All his father's debts were paid, and his lawyer spoke of large sums invested in various ways; so Mrs. Haskins consulted 'her set,' and the result was the brilliant assemblage which Laura and Bertha were to honor, and where that 'little old maid,' their aunt, was to appear in society after ten years' seclusion.

The hero of the evening had not appeared when two, under the escort of Mr. Leslie, Bertha and Laura's father, entered, but soon a movement near the door announced his arrival; a tall, distinguished-looking man, of thirty-five or six, with finished manners and a well modulated voice; a man to notice in any circle, for the broad intellectual brow, and large honest eyes that greeted yours; but now, with the glitter of his wealth, a man, Silverdale thought, to fall down to and worship.

He had greeted his hostess, had made nearly the circle of the room, bowing to new friends, greeting with warm cordiality his old ones, when his eyes fell upon a golden ear of wheat, resting upon a broad braid of black hair. The light that sprang to his eyes, the smile upon his lips, carried such a deep peace to one heart, gave one life of patient waiting such a new spring of happiness, that the words of polite greeting fell upon ears that scarcely heard them.

True—it was! Her trust repaid—her long constancy rewarded!

No one else noted more than the quiet greeting of old friends; but two hearts were full of deep joy, rest after weary longing.

Some of the guests were invited by the returned Australian to a house-warming, knowing, for the first time, that a new mansion, the building and furnishing of which had long been a source of speculation, was to be the future home of Lawrence Lane.

Of course, everybody accepted the invitation, and many a young heart fluttered at the thought that so splendid a mansion must soon need a mistress.

One week soon glided away. Aunt Fanny was very kind in helping to trim new peach-colored silks for the sisters; but there was an odd smile on her lip when Lawrence Lane's matrimonial prospects were discussed. A few days before the eventful night, Aunt Fanny, to her nieces' surprise, went on a visit to some old friends.

The evening appointed for the house-warming came at last. Carriages set down their loads of fair beauties before the superb mansion, the window of which blazed with light. Merry voices rang through the hall and rooms, gay footsteps flew from one beautiful apartment to another, till it was whispered—no one knew by whom—that the revellers were invited to meet the mistress as well as the master of the mansion. The closed doors, which shut off a small room from the long drawing-room, were eagerly watched, as the guests assembled, and no host came to welcome them.

At length they were opened, and the tall, handsome hero of the hour entered, with a small, white-robed figure on his arm; and more than one cry of astonishment greeted "Frances Somers;" and more than one ill-natured whisper was directed at Lawrence Lane's taste in choosing, when all the beauty of Silverdale was before him, That Little Old Maid.

USEFUL RECEIPTS.

Strawberry Short-cake.—Into three pints of flour, rub, dry, two teaspoons heaping full of cream tarter; add half a tea-cup of butter, a little salt, one teaspoonful of soda dissolved in a pint of milk and water. Mix quickly and thoroughly, roll to an inch in thickness, and bake twenty minutes in a quick oven. Take a quart of strawberries, and add cream and sugar to make a sauce. For this purpose small-sized, rather acid berries with sprightly flavor are preferable. When the short-cake is done, divide it in three layers, butter them, and spread the strawberries between. Eat while warm.

Strawberry Dumplings.—Make crust same as directed for short-cake; roll half an inch thick; put about a gill of strawberries for each dumpling. Bake, steam or boil half an hour.

Strawberry Pie.—Line your pie-dish with crust made in the usual manner; fill the dish with good ripe strawberries of medium size; sprinkle on a little flour, and sugar in proportion to the acidity of the berries. Cover with a thin crust.

Strawberry Jam.—For every pound of strawberries take three quarters of a pound of sugar. The berries should be mashed in a preserving kettle, and the sugar mixed with them. Boil from twenty minutes to half an hour, stirring constantly.

A NEW CHOLERA DISINFECTANT.—A communication has been received at the Department of State from the American Legation at London, inclosing two pamphlets relating to certain experiments by Dr. James Dewar, of Kirkcaldy, for testing the efficacy of sulphurous acid gas as a disinfectant. Results are cited which lead to the conviction that, Rinderpest, Pleuro-Pneumonia, and Cholera, and some others by which the human family are afflicted may not only be very much modified, but even wholly prevented by this means. The method of generating the gas is very simple and inexpensive. It is only necessary to have a chafing of old cinders, set a small crucible into them and drop a piece of sulphur stick of the size of a man's thumb into it. This will fumigate a large cattle shed or byre in twenty minutes. The animals seem to enjoy it, and it acts as a tonic on man or beast.

An anecdote relating to the late Principal Taylor, of the University of Glasgow, is sufficiently ridiculous. A noble Lord had been on a visit to Glasgow, and wishing a suit of clothes for a special purpose, requested the waiter of his hotel to send for the principal tailor in the city. In a short time a venerable looking person was ushered into his lordship's presence. Are you the principal tailor here? said his lordship. I am, at your service, replied the visitor.—His lordship proceeded to explain that he was desirous of procuring a well-made suit of black clothes. Ah, said the visitor, I see there has been a mistake; you had sent for a principal tailor, and your message has been misunderstood. I am Dr. Taylor, Principal of the University.

The Bill to annex the British Provinces

Somebody has gone to the trouble of sending to Canada, in pamphlet form, copies of the bill of Mr. Banks, now before Congress, providing for the annexation of the British Provinces, with their consent and that of Great Britain. The New York Daily News also reprints the bill in full. Mr. Banks must be a genius of the first order; and Congress shows its real character in leading itself to the favor. Mr. Banks proposes to swallow up half a continent at a gulp. Everybody is to be bought up or bought out with something or in some way or other. The several Provinces are asked to hand over all their public lands to the Federal Government and submit themselves to the crushing weight of American taxes—the highest in the world—in consideration of having their debts assumed—debts so light that they are not felt to be a burthen in any of the Provinces—a few railroads built or promised or their construction 'aided' out of their own public lands, and a few obstructions in the navigation of the St. Lawrence removed.

These are the terms—and the bill declares them 'irrevocable'—on which British Americans are asked to sell their birthright and change their allegiance. The whole change is put as a matter of dollars and cents as! a very bad bargain it would be for the Provinces at that. But it is right that Mr. Banks and Congress should know that British Americans hold the conviction that there are some things above all price, which can never be brought to a money standard, and among these are free institutions, which insure at once liberty and security to their possessors. Where such interests are concerned, they will never consent to chaffer or bargain, to listen to any propositions, whether advantageous or otherwise.

Mr. Banks, to make a clean sweep of the northern part of the continent, proposes also to buy out the Hudson Bay Company. His price is $10,000 000, in such cats and dogs as compose American currency. No human being can for twenty four hours, say what that figure may mean in gold. But it is useless to raise questions about the amount. The Hudson Bay Company cannot convey to a foreign nation the sovereignty of England over this territory; and England will not part with her sovereignty in order that a few fur traders may make a little profit. Mr. Banks' bill does not pretend to be aggressive—he will tell us it is only permissive—but nevertheless, in assuming that these Provinces with the consent of England, may possibly be willing to sell out the model Republic, it displays a stupendous degree of impudence.—Leader.

THE ATLANTIC CABLE.

The programme of operation decided upon is briefly as follows:—'The 'Great Eastern' is to proceed to Bearhaven on Saturday, June 30. There she will take on board her final store and from Foilhommerum Bay will be laid from the 'William Corry.' When this is completed—and the operation is likely to last at least two days—the 'Great Eastern' will come round to Valentia, and after having made the splice will at once commence the work of laying the main cable. Last year it was fancied that the speed of the 'Great Eastern' was occasionally to great for safety paying out the rope. This time, therefore, her rate of going will be absolutely limited to below six knots.

At this speed it will occupy eleven or twelve days to complete her labors from Valentia Bay to Heart's Content.

During the whole time of operation the new instruments will be able to send signals through to Valentia at every hour, stating the latitude of the great ship, the weather, amount of cable paid out, &c.—Ordinary news and messages likely to interest those at sea, and isolated from the rest of the world, are also to be sent in reply from Ireland to the Great Eastern. Vessels have already been sent out to Newfoundland with three hundred tons of coal, and supposing the expedition to be successful, the 'Great Eastern' will take these on board and return to the spot where the cable was so unfortunately broken last year. This is to be grappled for, and, even if six weeks or two months are consumed in the efforts, grappled for till found. If the end is got to the surface, of course the small splice will be made with the portions which are now stowed on board the 'Great Eastern' and 'William Corry,' when the big ship will again return to Heart's Content Bay and lay the remainder on her passage.

Thus if all goes well, the month of September at larges will see us with two lines of telegraph to America, and both of which when once down in deep warters, are likely to remain in order for years to come.

The arrangements made for raising the cable of last year are as perfect as can well be imagined.—English Paper.

FENIANS IN THE ARMY.

(Dublin (June 27) cor. of London Times)

Private Cranston put in his defence before the court martial yesterday. On the charge of stating that he would get bit of sponge put in the nipples of all the rifles belonging to soldiers in his regiment not Fenians, he claimed an acquittal on the ground that there was no offence charged in conformity with the Forty-fourth article of war, as it was not alleged that the prisoner had not given notice to the Secretary of State for War, or caused Chambers to be apprehended by the civil power. He contended that the story of the witness Abraham was unworthy of credit—first, because he is deaf, and could not hear what he alleges about the sponges; secondly because he is a Protestant from an Orange district near Lugan, in the county of Armagh, while the prisoner is a Roman Catholic from Dungannon, both being persons not likely to trust one another, and both incapable of reading or writing. Besides, the prisoner to save his own life, for if any person subject to the Mutiny Act coming to the knowledge of any intended mutiny, shall not, without delay, give information thereof to his commanding officer, he shall suffer death, or such other punishment as by a court martial shall be awarded. If Abraham's representations of what passed at the Curragh be true he is liable to death for not disclosing them without delay to his commanding officer. His is the very offence for which the prisoner was on trial.—Confessedly, Abraham gave no information from the 4th of April till the 17th of February. He respectfully submitted that he was entitled to an acquittal, because the witness was an accomplice in the crime of having concealed an intended mutiny, in not having informed his commanding officer of it without delay. His evidence is the price he pays to save his life. He is, therefore, not to be believed without corroboration, were his story even probable; but, as it is showed, it is entirely to be discredited.

The Deputy Judge Advocate summed up the evidence. The court was then cleared.

The verdict will not be known for some days.

PARLIAMENTARY.

Already a month and ten days has been occupied by the legislative wisdom of the Canadas, and very little has yet been done by them. The great subject of Confederation is a secondary object with Galt & Co. provided they carry their pet scheme of altering the tariff, and Mr. Galt's Currency Scheme. In vain is it pointed out that opportunities are being wasted or lost. In vain are they warned that they are violating the very terms of the coalition which was formed for the express purpose of completing a union of the Provinces and settling the political discord that prevailed, all is to no purpose; Mr. Galt & Co. are strengthened by the coalition and they are also determined to profit by it, if possible, at the expense of the well being of the country, its trade, its prosperity and its future happiness.

It was understood that every other topic would be left in abeyance until Confederation would be perfected, yet a month and a half is gone and nothing done. The country has received some vague rumors of the proposed changes, but nothing definite has yet come to light, and yet all the while the people are anxiously waiting for something more definite. Ministers have so managed the affairs as to enable them to receive the complete sessional allowance; their idle talk and waste of time will have to be paid for, any way.

Another evil we see in the affair is that at the last hour the Confederation will be hurrying through, when there will not be time to give it that consideration it demands, and thus the greatest event of our history may become law without the people knowing anything of it, or being able to point to its defects. We expected better things, but our expectations are doomed to meet disappointment, to all appearance.

In reference to Mr. Galt's Banking scheme the Trade Review remarks:—

"We candidly confess our inability to see any justification for a measure which is intended to substitute a Government circulation for the bank note system of the country. That it will save the Government anything is exceedingly doubtful, but that it will seriously cripple and damage many important and valuable interests is not doubtful at all.

And again:—"It is the Western Banks, therefore, and the Eastern banks doing business in the West, that are most vitally interested in Mr. Galt's proposal. Our own community throughout, and our own banks, are of course, interested directly, for whatever damages Western Canada tells remotely on them. And that the proposal will interfere most seriously with the business of the Western banks, it does not require much penetration to discover.

If the bill were carried and adopted by the Western banks, it is clear enough they could not obtain the necessary amount of bills to carry on their business without handing over to the Government, (in addition to all their debentures some five or six millions in specie.

Now that they could not do this at present is plain enough, for they have only about that sum altogether, and they must hold a reserve against their deposits. The specie then must be obtained from on side sources.

That the effect of a heavy drain of specie from the Western banks to the coffers of Government would be a universal curtailment of discounts and extreme tightness of money, no one can fail to perceive. Under such a state of things, strong houses might stand, but hundreds of others would be reduced to embarrassment and distress. A considerable proportion of them would fail, and bad debts innumerable be the order of the day. The whole business of the country would require to be reduced in order that the specie might be obtained from abroad. It could not be drawn from the Lower Canadian banks, for it would be all they could do to comply with the provisions of the Act for themselves, if, indeed, they would not have to reduce too.

Thus we are told by a Lower Canada Journal, that the system would be ruinous to our trade, and especially Upper Canada trade, to the great injury of numerous traders; yet in the face of all this, the most important business is delayed in abeyance to this and other pet schemes. When will our rulers learn wisdom?

The Proposed Changes in the Representation of Upper Canada.

These are, as far as concerns us, as follows:—

The county of Peterborough divided into two Ridings, to be called respectively the West and East Ridings:—

The West Riding shall consist of the Townships of South Monaghan, (taken from the county of Northumberland) North Monaghan, Smith, Ennismore and the town of Peterborough. Pop., 11,157.

The East Riding shall consist of the Townships of Asphodel Belmont and Methuen, Douro, Dummer, Galway, Harvey, Minden, Stanhope and Dysart, Otonabee, Snowden, and the village of Ashburnham, and any other surveyed Township lying to the North of the said East Riding. Pop., 14,738.

The county of Victoria divided into two Ridings, to be called respectively the South and North Ridings:—

The South Riding shall consist of the townships of Ops, Mariposa, Emily, Verulam, and the town of Lindsay. Pop., 16,750.

The North Riding shall consist of the townships of Anson, Bexley, Carden, Dalton, Digby, Eldon, Fenelon, Minden, Laxton, Lutterworth, Macaulay and Draper, Somerville, and Morrison, Muskoka, Monck and Watt, (taken from the county of Simcoe) and any other surveyed Townships lying to the north of the said North Riding. Pop., 7,586.

EUROPEAN AFFAIRS.

The great contest is still going on. Latest accounts bring the intelligence of decisive victories for Prussia. On the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd instant, most important and decisive engagements took place between the Prussians under the Crown Prince of Prussia and the Austrian Army, under their famous General Benedek. For several days the Prussians were endeavouring to form a junction of their forces, and in their efforts to do so suffered the partial defeat chronicled last week, but, after various strategic movements they were successful, and then they inflicted a severe blow on the Austrians. The London Times of the 4th instant says:—

"The war in Bohemia is actual work. The Austrians, we are told, lost 15,000 men in their various encounters with the army under the Crown Prince of Prussia; they had 25,000 put hors de combat in their vain attempts to arrest the progress of the army under Prince Frederick Charles—altogether, 40,000 men in five days. The prisoners are computed at 15,000, leaving 25,000 for the dead and wounded. Whole battalions have been annihilated; whole corps—the Clam-Gallas, the Gablenz and the Saxon corps, no less than the Kalnok Brigade—are so utterly broken up as to be unable to re-appear in action for some time. Benedek's army has fallen back behind the Elbe, taking up its position between the fortresses of Josephstadt and Koniggratz, greatly disheartened and disorganized, according to the account of Austrian officers, prisoners in Prussian hands. The desertion of Italian soldiers from the Austrian ranks is on the increase.

The Times of the 5th also says:—

"The great decisive blow has been struck, and the fortune of war has once more declared in favor of Prussia. The bold conception and consummate execution of their farsighted plan of campaign, and the results of a long series of bloody encounters had, a the close of last week, enabled the Prussian Generals to mass their forces on the plain of Bohemia, and to press close upon their enemy, who, after disputing the ground inch by inch along every avenue of that mountain-girt kingdom had fallen back, foiled at all points, panting and bleeding, yet turning to bay on his last vantage ground on the Elbe, between his two strongholds of Josephstadt and Koniggratz. A pause of three days seems to have been allowed to the combatants on both sides. Finally, on Tuesday, the 1st Prussian army, under Prince Frederick Charles, advancing from Gitschin on the road that by Chlum and Horitz leads to Sadowa, and the 2nd Army, under the Crown Prince, crossing the Elbe to meet them, drew up all their combined forces, under the immediate command of their king,—an army, it is said, on less than eight army corps,—on some point near Koniggratz, between the right bank of the Elbe and the left of the Bistritz, a minor tributary stream which runs parallel to the main river from Horitz to its confluence with it.—Marshal Benedek aware that the decisive moment had arrived, issued forth from Koniggratz, apparently with only the army corps, but choosing, as was natural with a man who stood on his own ground, a most advantageous position. The battlefield is described as being near Horzitz, near Sadowa, near Koniggratz, the fighting raged, probably, from one end to the other of all that vast tract of country. The battle lasted twelve hours. For six hours the Austrians defended a strong position they had chosen behind the Bistritz, but it was taken by storm towards 2 o'clock, and by 7 in the evening the defeat of the Austrians was complete. The earliest Prussian bulletins of the same evening, at 8 and 11 o'clock, already claimed a victory, and spoke of their army as close in pursuit of their routed enemies. By later accounts, dated yesterday, we are told that three flags and thirty-four guns were taken by three of the victorious regiments, and no less than 10,000 Austrian prisoners had already been brought in. The trophies by which other corps signalized their victory and the total number of their prisoners had not yet been ascertained; but the 12th Prussian Hussars are said to have broken two Austrian squares. By their own admission, the Prussians purchased their triumph at a very heavy price; all their corps were brought into action, and all suffered severely.

It thus appears that Austria is badly beaten, so much so that the English papers say that there are no mitigating circumstances chronicled; no telegrams announcing the results, and according to reports their army 40,000 less than it was a few days ago.—Some of their most illustrious Generals are among the dead and wounded: Count Thun and Colonel Binder are among the dead; three Archdukes and Gen Festetics among the wounded, and two Princes were taken prisoners. Some hopes are entertained that a peace may be arranged; but as Austria proposed an armistice and Prussia refused, nothing remains but to try the chances of war a little longer. Napoleon is reported as offering to be a mediator between the contending parties in the South, and it is said that Austria is willing to accept, and would cede Venetia to France; Prussia, however, not being willing to come to terms, may change the whole aspect of affairs, which may lead to complications not yet provided against. Many are of the opinion that Napoleon III. is contemplating an increase of territory, and that Prussian victory may afford sufficient pretext to demand it. One thing is certain, the end is not yet.

ITALY

Since the defeat of the Italians there appears a general inactivity in the South, still there are no hopes of a cessation of hostilities. General LaMarmora, who led the Italian army, is fast falling into disgrace, because of the failure of the attack on the Quadrilateral, and Cialdini is likely to take his place. The next arrival from Europe will bring important news.

ENGLAND.

So far we hear no mention of English Interference. One party is busy trying to form a ministry, and until that is completed there is no likely to be a change in the state of affairs there

A NEW DRILL SHED.

We learn that at last Peterborough is in the fair way to have a Drill Shed. Major Patterson has been in communication with the government, and then with the Warden of this County and other members of the County and Town Councils in reference to the erection of a proper shed. The government is prepared to provide one half the costs of the shed, provided the County and Town provide the remaining half, and this we feel certain will be done at once. The site which we learn has been chosen is the South East corner of the old burying ground, and nothing now remains but the action of the Councils. The County has already expressed its willingness, and there will be a meeting of the Town Council this evening to take the matter into consideration. The plans are not yet forthcoming of course, but from remarks of those conversant with the matter. It is proposed to erect a building about 300 by 65 with an armoury attached, the probable cost of which will be about $4000, and if satisfactory arrangements are concluded to-night, the work may be proceeded with at once.

Lindsay is also to have a shed. The people there had determined to have a shed, independent of the government, and were at work taking out timber for the purpose, but when they learned that the government was ready to aid the work, they changed their plans and are now to have a shed, the probable cost of which will be about $2500.

The New York papers say that the 16th instant was the hottest day of the last ten years. There were 99 cases of sunstroke in the city 13 of them proving fatal.

PETERBOROUGH CIRCUIT.

The Rev. Mr. Brock, who has labored here during the last two years, goes to Prescott, the Rev. Mr. Johnson has taken Mr. Brock's place here. At a meeting of the quarterly Board of this Circuit, the following resolution was moved by Walter Sheridan seconded by Robert Richardson, and carried unanimously, "that this board, appreciating the talent, courtesy, christian bearing and strictly honourable character of the Rev. James Brock, and the ever ready and kindly tendered services of himself and family in the Sabbath School and other church offices, tender to them their heartfelt wishes for their future happiness and prosperity, praying that God may long spare them to labour in their Master's vineyard."

In addition to the respect and good will of his own people, Mr. Brock carries with him the respect and good will of the different Christian denominations here, and the respect of all who knew him, and whose best wishes for his and family's future well being, accompany him to his new sphere of labour and usefulness.

Firemen's Annual Pic-Nic

Will come off on Wednesday, 25th inst., among the Islands of Rice Lake. The steamer Otonabee is chartered for the occasion, a quadrille band will be in attendance, and arrangements are made to convey the party from the Market Square to the Locks. The steamer is to leave the Locks at half-past seven precisely. Tickets to be $1.50, and can be had from the members of the Fire Company. We wish they may have a fine day, good times and a pleasant sail.

An Accident.

While Mrs. Heney, of Douro, was driving a horse and wagon along the way on Monday, her horse took fright at something and ran away, dragging her over some piles of stones that were in the way, and fearfully mutilating her. Dr. Kinnaird was called in and did what he could to relieve her sufferings.—She is, however, in a very precarious state; up till yesterday morning she was quite insensible, and some doubts were entertained of her recovery.

Volunteers Home Again.

On Tuesday, Captain Kennedy and his company returned home after a brief stay at Port Colborne, whence they had been called a week since. The Captain and his men look well, and were heartily greeted by their friends and others who met them at the Station.

Cricket Match.

A match is to be played to day, on the Ashburnham ground, between the first 11 and second 18 of Peterborough. The wickets will be pitched at two o'clock, and as the booth has been refitted there is every accommodation for those who may favor the place with their presence. We wish them a pleasant day and good play.

The Races.

In our last issue we chronicled the defeat of Billy Button by Lady Florence; but on Friday Lady Florence was beaten by Old Fenian.

A WARNING TO BOYS.—On Tuesday, a boy named George Wells, son of Mr. John Wells, of this Town, in company with another boy went to Mr. Dickson's Dam to bathe, and getting on a saw log, it turned over upsetting the boy in the water, and as no one, capable of rendering assistance, was near, the lad was drowned. An inquest was held over the body by Coroner Harvey, and a verdict of accidental drowning was rendered.

We have just received from W. S. Mackie & Son, Rochester, N. Y., U. S. A., wholesale and retail Importers of Music Merchandise, the following music published by them: "Oh Cling to the Union," song, by Geo. R. Poulton; "Hazel Eyed Nannee," song, by Georg R. Poulton; "Gettysburg Victory March," for two flutes and guitar, by J. T. Withers.

A Missing Ship.

The large American emigrant ship, Monarch of the Seas, which sailed from Liverpool, on the 19th of March last, for New York, has been four months at sea, and fears are entertained that some direful disaster has overtaken her, and that she has gone to the bottom with all on board. She had 674 passengers on board and a crew of 54 men, including officers. The vessel was valued at $125,000 and insured.

Coalition between the Fenians and Republicans.

At a largely attended union meeting of the different circles of the Fenian brotherhood, held at Fenian Hall, Chicago, on the 8th inst., District Centre L. H. O'Connor in the chair, resolutions were adopted, pledging the Irish people to renewed exertions for the re-one of Ireland from English "thraldom." The following significant resolution was also adopted:—

"Resolved,—That it is a foul libel upon the patriotism and intelligence of Irish Americans to assert that we are the property, the voting chattels of any political party, and that we will satisfactorily repel that calumny, by hereafter, on all occasions, voting for that party which finds no excuse in unjust laws, in vested rights, in ancient prejudices, for degrading and enslaving men, or for preventing free men, with arms in their hands, recovering that liberty and nationality of which they and their race have long been cruelly and infamously deprived."

Speeches were made by several prominent members of the organization, and the resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Lord Derby submitted the following names for a new Ministry, which was approved of: Lord Derby, Premier and leader in the House of Lords; Disraeli, Chancellor of the Exchequer and leader in the House of Commons; Stanley, Foreign Secretary; Walpole, Home Secretary; Gen. Peel, War Secretary; Pakington, Admiralty; Northcote, Board of Trade; Duke of Buckingham, President of the Council.

A great reform meeting took place in London on Monday night, at which there were from 30,000 to 50,000 persons present.

The Rochester, N. H., Courier states that several families in that town are making preparations to emigrate to the Holy Land this season, under the charge of Rev. Mr. Adams, and will settle near Jaffa, where Mr. A. has already negotiated for the land.—They take frame houses and movable property with them.

IS IT CALLED FOR.

A letter appeared in the Globe of a late date, dated at Peterborough, addressed to the Honorable Mr. Mellor, and signed "A Canadian Catholic," which is in our opinion, uncalled for and unprovoked, is calculated to arouse the very spirit it appears to deprecate, and certainly would have been as well unwritten. We do not pretend to give the author of the letter, but could almost with a degree of certainty.

The writer insinuates that Roman Catholics are persecuted in this County, as well as in Upper Canada generally on account of their religion: that they are not granted the privileges of other citizens, or if granted them, they are not permitted peaceably and quietly to enjoy them, all of which is summed up in three words:

"But I refer to the petty persecutions, of a social, political and public character, which for years have been indulged in, not only against Irishmen of a certain class, but especially against Catholics in general in Upper Canada, and which, under the stimulus of recent events, appear now to have attained their culminating point; and, in the absence of which, neither your league nor your pen would have been necessary to teach Irish or Canadian Roman Catholics their duties and obligations in this trying hour."

Now we must confess our entire ignorance of those "social, political, and public persecutions" in this locality. A man Catholics enjoy all the privileges of other classes of Her Majesty's subjects, and no one tries to deprive them of one privilege—and we trust that this childish effort to fasten on their fellow citizens the odium of persecuting them will prove abortive.

This "Canadian Catholic" again intimates that the reason why so few Catholics swell the ranks of the volunteers is simply and solely that in this free land, the power of the majority, unlawfully applied, denies them privileges and rights, which though, perhaps, trivial and secondary in themselves, are nevertheless cherished, and are fully accorded to others. It is that by the same vindictive and insolent majority their feelings are outraged, themselves and even their wives and little ones insulted, simply because they adhere to their, and your, ancient faith." By this we suppose he means that he was disappointed in not having his services accepted as a volunteer; but here the blame lies with the government, and it is wrong to fasten it on any body of citizens. But what was denied him was denied to others also. Colonel Haultain three or four times offered his services as a volunteer and they were refused. What has "A Canadian Catholic" to complain of more?

The charge that the Catholics have been a weeded out" by their orange associates we feel certain, is entirely unfounded, as in filling up the companies the religious faith of any one is not even mooted, much less any one persecuted on account of his faith.—Equally puerile is the cry of "proscription of a respectable citizen" from occupying a prominent position in the gymnastic club that was attempted to be raised.

The fact is a protestant proposed that "respectable citizen," and a protestant seconded the proposition, and protestant votes carried it. The opposers, also, are almost all to a man opposers of orangeism, and we are confident not one of them was an orangeman, hence the cry, that orangemen are persecuting "respectable citizens," is without foundation. Politically, also, they enjoy all the rights and liberties of these fellow-citizens of every other faith, and these liberties are never invaded, a fact which we would be glad to be able to say concerning the catholics.

In mixed communities where protestantism prevails, invariably catholics are allowed to vote without let or hinderance, nor is the liberty of free speech ever denied them, whereas, in those Townships where catholics predominate, once and again respectable and inoffensive protestants have had to find safety in flight. Most unfortunate, therefore, is our "Canadian Catholic" in references to general acts; with private acts and words we have nothing to do.

Another accusation:—

"It is the grinding exactions of a political system which have driven Irish Catholics from their native land, and it is the petty persecutions to which I have alluded instigated by the bigoted intolerance of a vindictive majority in Upper Canada, which have driven thousands of honest men from this fair Province, to seek in a foreign country the honourable career, and the exemption from insult, which are denied them here. I say, knowingly and truthfully, that these are the true causes of the exodus from Canada of thousands of your countrymen and co-religionists, and I may add that more are preparing to follow."

The above remarks have long since been ably refuted by the Hon. Mr. McGee himself, and therefore require no explanations from us. Mr. McGee says:—"they know right well they, know from personal observation that the Irish status here is vastly higher than ever it was in the United States."

In the United States they are the d—d Irish, not are they as much respected as the Negro—mere "tenantry," "depredators," "dwelling in hideous dens," six hundred under one roof, in violation of all the laws of decency and morality, and much more might be quoted from Mr. McGee's letter to the "Irish Press," to shew that not persecution here or want of true liberty, compels them to go to the United States, but because they are dupes of unprincipled leaders, who wish to make a gain of them. We have shewn that the whole train of accusations against Orangemen, and an intolerant protestantism is without foundation, and our only wonder is that any man would be found so simple as to raise a false alarm and thus be found increasing the spirit of moral assassination of which he himself complains. His time would have been better spent in attending to his lawful business, as if there were fewer grumblers like "A Catholic Canadian" the people would be more content, and there would be less religious strife, and fewer malcontents.

CONGRESS.—The citizens of the Town of Cobourg have a public holiday to-day; the volunteers have gone per steamer Rochester to Presquile on an excursion.

The saw mill owned by John McCarthy, about two miles north of Cobourg, was destroyed by fire on the night of Tuesday, the 10th inst., it is believed to be the work of an incendiary. Loss partially covered by insurance.

THE MIDGE.—We are sorry to learn, that this destructive pest has appeared in some of the earlier sown Spring wheat, and in sufficient quantities to cause serious apprehensions. The high winds and frequent rains prevent the insect working to much good advantage, but still it is doing damage. A field of Spring wheat owned by Mr. J. moss Copeland, just outside the town limits which is extremely early, and promises a most extraordinary yield, if left alone, is affected by the midge, some heads yielding hundreds of the destructive little worms. There are a few who believe that the insect will not do much damage except to the early sown wheat.—St. Catharines Journal.

MILITARY CHANGES.—The following changes are announced to take place in the disposition of regiments of the line serving in British America:—The 47th will remove from Toronto to Halifax, and be replaced by the 17th from Montreal. The 18th from Hamilton will relieve the the 17 at Montreal, and the 100th Royal Canadian from Malta will, immediately on their arrival, proceed to Hamilton. To carry out the above change, the 17th Regiment left Montreal yesterday morning in the steamer Passport, and consequently will arrive here this afternoon. It is presumed that the 47th left Toronto yesterday en route to Halifax, and if such was the case would have passed down in the steamer Kingston this morning. The troop ship Simoon, with the 100th Regiment on board, is now many days passed due from Gibraltar. One wing of the 30th Regiment will this week be despatched from Montreal to Point Levis, to work on the fortifications.—Ottawa Citizen.

ACCIDENT.—The Belleville Chronicle furnishes the following particulars of the accident previously reported in the Picton Times: On Sunday, 8th inst., at Bongard's Bay, a few miles below Picton, it appears that a Mrs. Pierce, with five of her children (four sons and one daughter,) the eldest son being about 18 years and the youngest about 6 years of age, in company with a young man named Brown, nearly 20, and two sons of Mr. John Harrington, respectively 15 and 6 years old, started in a small boat for the opposite shore for the purpose of picking berries. The hat of one of the children blew off, when one attempting to recover it, upset the boat in about seven feet of water. All were drowned except Mrs. Pierce and the child Harrington, whom she saved by placing him on the bottom of the upturned boat, and by its assistance, and being in some measure sustained by her under garments, she contrived to reach the shore, leaving her five children and the two young men in the water, where they were found dead within a circle of a few yards. Strange to say, Brown, Harrington and two of the young Pierces good swimmers. Brown had been in service through the late American war.—Mrs. Pierce, as may well be imagined, is all but crazed.

Flight of an Impostor from Port Hope.

The Leader says that a second Dr. Tumblety, styling himself the Rev. Dr. Potts, who has been fleecing the poor lame and crippled out of considerable sums, by pretending to cure all their diseases in the twinkle of an eye, made a very speedy retreat from here on Saturday night. A mob gathered round the hotel where he had his rooms and gave him warning to leave immediately. He took a hint, and early the next morning was seen on foot making quick time on the road to Cobourg. This morning his crutches, some 50 or 100, were seized and placed on the main street and a bonfire made of them, amid the cheers of the by-standers who had gathered round to see the sport.

Fenian War Materials.

The detective police belonging to the Admiralty and War Department, at Woolwich, have just discovered an extensive manufacture of friction tubes, for the firing of cannon privately carried on in two dwelling houses at Plumstead, for a person in business at Greenwich, by whom it is known consignments have been made to a firm in Liverpool and by them, it is said shipped to Ireland. On proceeding to the houses in question every room was fitted with turning lathes and other machinery, the men on the premises being workmen employed during the day in the Royal Arsenal Ordnance Department.

One of the detectives, when about entering a room was asked by a woman not to do so, as she had two children lying in bed, there who were ill of fever. The officer, however was not to be deceived by such a ruse, and on entering the room he found some thousands of friction tubes already manufactured and packed in boxes for removal, with sufficient detonating powder and other explosive substances to destroy one-half the row of houses.

The discovery has been reported to the proper authorities, and the premises in question are under surveillance.

Terrible Effect of the Prussian Needle Gun.

(From the London Daily News, July 4.)

It is impossible not to look forward with anxiety to the news which may be expected from Bohemia within the next few days.—Considering the losses which the armies have sustained, the generals on both sides might well be inclined to suspend for a while the work of mutual destruction. The most recent battles have been exceedingly sanguinary. The Prussian needle gun, as all fear witness, has been wielded with a terrible effect, which has made a deep impression on the ill armed Austrian troops. A military correspondent who saw the fighting at Potoli declares that the Austrians who fell under the fire of infantry were compared to the Prussians, six to one. On the other hand, the Austrians have more than once, and notably at Gitschin, had the advantage of strong positions, which enabled them to inflict heavy loss upon their adversaries. The Prussians are publishing extraordinary accounts of their enemy's losses. To these little importance need be attached. But if we could be certain that the Austrians had taken as many prisoners as the Prussians the losses of the two armies, from all causes, since yesterday week could not be estimated at less than 60 000 men.

Great battle in Paraguay.

A great battle occurred on the 24th of June, between the Brazilian forces and the Paraguayans, with heavy loss on both sides. The result was indecisive, both sides claiming the victory. Hostilities were proceeding. The Paraguayans commenced the attack with 13 000 infantry and 8.000 cavalry, with desperate fury, but were repulsed and retired. Their loss is estimated at 5,000 killed and a large number left on the field. The brunt of the battle on the side of the allies was borne by the Brazilians who lost about 1 000 men, killed and wounded. The Argentines lost 400, and the Uruguayans also suffered severely. The Paraguayans had retired to their camp. No material advantage has accrued to the allies from the above engagement.

RETURNED.—The Welland Canal Field Battery have been relieved from duty, and are once more at home pursuing their regular business. Port Robinson gave its men a splendid ovation, and treated them with that honor and respect which their gallantry and bravery has won throughout the Province. Their Captain, Dr. King, who was so seriously wounded in the leg, has been promoted by the military authorities to the rank of Brevet Major.—St. Catharines Nepheliat.

Meeting of the Grand Masonic Lodge.

From the Montreal Gazette, July 12.

The Grand Lodge of Canada assembled at the Masonic Hall, Place d'Armes, where the Most Worshipful the Grand Master, S.G.W. Alex. Kirkpatrick, and J. D. W. B. C. Day, P.G., opened the Lodge in ample form. The lodge-room was crowded. The District Deputy Grand Masters and the Worshipful Masters of the various Lodges, as well as their wardens, were in attendance. The Grand Master, W. B. Simpson, Esq., of Kingston, delivered the annual address. In the course of his remarks he alluded to the mighty European struggle now progressing, and also to the recent Fenian Invasion of Canadian soil, and appealed to every brother to be prepared for every emergency. The loyalty of the Brotherhood had never been questioned. It is the duty above all others that is most strongly inculcated. With religious and political questions, as a body, Freemasons have nothing to do in their Lodges, but as to their loyalty to their Queen and patriotism to their country they not only consider it a paramount duty, but one of their highest privileges. Though the order has been denounced by those who affect to know its true principles, it needs no apology, its acts speak for themselves, and by these acts the craft are willing to be judged. He alluded to the contemplated federation of the Provinces, and the necessity of carefully considering the position the Grand Lodge of Canada will then be placed in. He said that a strong feeling existed among the most prominent masons of the sister provinces in favor of one Grand Lodge for the whole of British North America. And, believing that a confederation of the craft could be highly beneficial, he strongly recommended it, and it would then make the Grand Lodge of Canada only second to our honored and revered mother the Grand Lodge of England. He urged the appointment of a committee whose duty it should be to invite the Lodges in the sister provinces to meet at some central place and there prepare measures to receive the subordinate Lodges of those provinces into the Grand Lodge of Canada, which should afterwards be assembled for the purpose of ratifying the acts of the said committee, and of then declaring itself the Grand Lodge of B. N. A. He congratulated the Grand Lodge upon the flourishing condition of the craft of the province during the past year. He had granted dispensations for several new Lodges, and from the reports sent in by the various District Deputy Grand Masters, there can be no doubt about the unanimity and brotherly feeling everywhere prevailing. He alluded with great pathos to the death of that exalted brother the Ven. Archdeacon Scott, a man revered and respected by all who knew him, a man whose memory will be ever kept in remembrance by his many virtues, and by his kind and amiable disposition. In the language of our great poet "Goodness and he will fill up one monument," and he trusted that the craft will erect some lasting memorial for so excellent a brother. He also alluded to the death of the ex-Grand Secretary of England, brother Wm. Hy. White—a name familiar wherever Freemasonry is known. He urged upon his brethren to honor their memory by striving to emulate their virtues. He said that the position of the Grand Lodge of Canada with the other Grand Lodges of the world was one of the most cordial and fraternal kind. And in conclusion, he wished to draw the attention of the Freemasons of this province to the recent conflagration at the city of Portland, the seat of the Grand Lodge of Maine, and he recommended that a suitable and substantial expression of the warm and heartfelt sympathy of the Freemasonry of Canada should at once be sent to the brethren of Portland.

The Report of the Board of General Purposes showed the books of the R. W. the G. S. to be kept in an excellent manner, doing credit to that officer. It showed the receipts during the year to be $6,640 26, and available assets in cash invested in Bank at 4 per cent. to the amount of $15,791 20, a most prosperous state of affairs surely.

The following are the officers elected for the ensuing year:—

RIOT AT QUEBEC.

Quebec, July 11.

We have recorded the disturbance of shipping affairs, owing to demand for increased wages for ship laborers recently, and that vessels had gone to the opposite shores to load. The strikers determined to stop work on the other side, assembling at Levis on Thursday, and proceeding to the St. Lawrence Dock and Warehouse Company's Wharves at South Quebec, where the men working at the ships had to desist from labor. In consequence of intimation at 11 o'clock yesterday morning, 80 men of the ship laborers' society, as we are informed, went on board the Levis ferry steamers without paying their fare. Upon the Captain and Purser attempting to put the intruders ashore, they were outnumbered and threatened with a beating. Meanwhile sympathizers on the wharf applauded the job on board, and shouted to them to seize the vessel or the better to carry out the ends they had in view. The passengers in the cabin were greatly alarmed, and would have gone ashore but for the steamer having put off. The Captain seeing men ascend to the upper deck and crowd about the wheel house, while others gathered menacingly round the engineer, seized an iron bar and threatened to strike down the first man who should interfere with the management of the vessel, the engineer, however, was struck down by one of the crowd on the Levis side. The Captain is about to take out a warrant against the leaders. The strikers landing at the opposite shore were reinforced by a crowd of three hundred, armed with sticks, and marched to Davy's Patent Ship yard. The proprietor closed the gates, and warned them off, but they got over the fence, and made their way through the yard, despite Mr Davy's protestation, till they reached the ship Simonds, Captain Livelt, whose laborers they intended to drive from the place. The Captain had a small cannon, and all the arms on board, and threatened to fire upon any one who came over the ship's sides. He thus kept them at bay, till intimation had been sent to the Mayor of Levis, Mr. Russell of the Water Police, and the Commander of the frigate Aurora, who, on requisition of the Mayor, sent two boats, with their crews fully armed, to protect the Simonds, and arrest the "strikers," that they might be brought to trial. The fellows, however, made themselves scarce, before legal Naval Engagement on the Lago di Garda.

(A letter to the London Daily News dated Desenzano, June 22, says: "This morning, between seven and eight o'clock, the first cannon shots were fired—three signal guns discharged from the fortress of Peschiera. Already several hours before this nature, the authorities at Peschiera had despatched a couple of gunboats towards the island of Garda, lying off the southern horn of the Bay of Sala, and at about 11 a. m. others were sent on the lake from Peschiera to join them. Soon after came the inhabitants of the village of Pietrea, a hamlet lying in a commanding situation between Desenzano and Sala, were startled by hearing a lively cannonade proceeding from the direction of the lake. Happening to be passing through Pietrea at the moment, I hastened to the nearest point whence an extended view of the lake could be obtained, and beheld the four Austrian gunboats actively engaged with the small fortress of Madonna, situated at the extremity of a small tongue of land running out in the lake and forming the southern horn of the Bay of Sala. To get from the village of Pietrea to our point of view had occupied us less than a quarter of an hour, but in that time the gunboats had retired nearly two miles from the first position whence they had taken up, which was entirely owing to my appearance at two miles from the fort at Madonna. The fortress mounts twelve heavy Cavalli guns, carrying from three to four miles, was lucidly garrisoned by several companies of the 32nd regular artillery regiment, and the guns made such good practice that the enemy's gunboats very soon seemed to have had enough, and retired toward the Austrian shore of the lake.

"Between 1 and 2 p. m., a larger paddle steamer—the Hawe or the Francis Joseph both of which carry eight guns—was seen approaching at full speed from the direction of Peschiera. At the sight of her, we, who were on the lookout had little doubt but that the engagement would become renewed, and gazing alternately at the fort and the gun boats, we anxiously looked for the white puff of smoke, which proclaimed the discharge of the guns about one hundred seconds before the sound reached us. For about an hour longer, the four gunboats, in company with the newly arrived war steamer, as if uncertain what to do after, hovered about opposite the fort taking good care to keep well out of shot, and continually hugging the Austrian shore. At length, making up their minds that they did not like it, the four gunboats, foll wing the lead of the steamer, turned tail, and made off in a south-ely direction towards Peschiera. As the five vessels passed our look-out place at a distance of about six miles—the lake is on average about seven miles in breadth—it appeared to us as if the steamer was taking in tow one of the gunboats, which seemed to have been disabled."

Victor Emmanuel's Manifesto.

The recent English mails now bring Victor Emmanuel's stirring manifesto to the Italian people which has already acted upon them like a bugle call, and meets with the universal approbation of all friends of freedom and the nationalities:—

FLORENCE, June 20.

"Seven years have already passed since Austria attacked my States because I had supported the common cause of the country in the councils of Europe. I took up the sword to defend my throne, the liberty of my people, the honor of the Italian name and to fight for the rights of the nation.—Victory was in favor of right. The valor of the army, the zeal of the volunteers, the concord and wisdom of the people, and the assistance of a magnanimous ally gained the almost complete independence and liberty of Italy. Supreme reasons, we were obliged to respect, prevented us from at that time, accomplishing that just and glorious enterprise. One of the noblest provinces of Italy, united by the desires of the population to my crown, and which its brave resistance and continual protest against foreign dominion rendered especially dear and sacred to us, remained in the hands of Austria. Though sorrowful at heart, I abstained from troubling Europe, which desired peace. My Government occupied itself with improving the work of interior organization, with opening sources of public prosperity, and with fortifying the country by land or by sea, awaiting a favorable opportunity to accomplish the independence of Venetia. Although waiting was not without danger, nevertheless we understood how to keep shut within our hearts our feelings as Italians, and our just impatience; and thus were preserved in fact the right of the nation and the dignity of the crown and of Parliament in order that Europe might understand what was due to Italy. Austria suddenly reinforcing her troops upon our frontier, and proceeding as by he hostile-threatening attitude has come to disturb the pacific talk of the reorganization of the kingdom. I have replied by again taking up arms, and you have afforded the world the grand sight of hastening with promptitude and enthusiasm into the army and to enlist among the volunteers. Nevertheless, when friendly powers endeavored to settle the difficulties by a congress, I gave a last pledge of my feeling to Europe, and hastened to accept the proposal. Austria again refused, this time rejecting negotiations and all agreement, affording thus a fresh proof that if she confides in her strength she does not rely equally upon the goodness of her cause and f her right. You, also Italians may trust in your strength, looking with pride upon your valiant army and strong navy; but you may rely still more firmly upon the sacredness of your right, whose triumph is henceforth infallible. We are supported by the judgment of public opinion and by the sympathy of Europe, which knows that Italy independent and secure in her territory, will become a guarantee for peace and order. Italians, I hand over the government of the state to Prince Carignan and again take up the eagles of Goito and Mascnago, of Palestro and San Martino. I feel that I shall accomplish the vows made at the tomb of my high-minded father. I wish to be once more the first soldier of Italian Independence.

(Signed,) VICTOR EMMANUEL."

THE MARRIAGE OF THE PRINCESS HELENA.—In reference to "certain rumors" anent the approaching marriage of the Princess Helena with Prince Christian, it is understood that the Prince of Wales has consented to be present at the ceremony, although the bride will not be given away by him, but by the Queen in person.

CANADIAN OIL WELLS.—Enniskillen, C. W. is situated some sixteen miles from the St. Clair River, and nearly opposite to Newport, and is one of the richest Oil Districts in the world. There are now sunk and in progress near 300 wells, most of them yielding largely; in one case the well as been overflowing for some time and it is estimated that about two barrels per minute is running to waste, and so far they have not been able to stop it, this truly is one of natures wonders, though not more wonderful than the power of the "Canadian Pain Destroyer" in curing sudden colds, rheumatism, pleurisy, spinal affections, sprains, bruises, &c Sold by all Medicine Dealers at 25 cts per bottle.

Is health worth having? If it is protect it—it is a jewel as easily lost as vitriue, and in many cases as difficult to recover. In this climate, and more particularly at this season of the year, people are very apt to take cold and suffer from sore throat, coughs splitting of blood and pulmonary complaints generally, which if not checked immediately lead to serious consequences. The question arises—which is the quickest remedy? Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers have been before the public for twenty years, and have always given perfect satisfaction, and invariably effect permanent cures when taken in season. Sold by all medicine dealers and county stores generally throughout the Province, at 25 cts per box.

HORSES SAVED.

The lives of thousands of Horses have been saved during the past year, and the credit is due to "Darley's Arabian Heave Remedy and Condition Medicine." This preparation is being extensively used, and exacts from all the highest praise. Nothing of the kind has ever before been half so successful or given such universal satisfaction; it cannot be equalled.—Any one can confidently recommend it, and would advise all who own horses to k ep a supply of it on hand—it may be the means of saving your horse's life.

Remember the name, and see that the signature of Hurd & Co. is on each package.

DARLEY'S

Arabian Heave Remedy and Condition Medicine

IS positively superior to any or all other preparations for the cure of Heaves, Coughs, Colds and Broken Wind, and all diseases which affect the Wind of Horses; also, as a Condition Medicine, surpassing everything of the kind; is easy to give, sure to cure, and safe in all cases and at all times, and does not prevent the horse from being worked while using it.

It at once takes the breathing appearance, by removing from the air cells the mucus-like lymph, or that secretion which in Heaves clogs them, causing a difficulty in breathing, and by its action on the diseased part causing the mucous membrane to resume its natural dimensions, thus equalizing the circulations of the blood, and restoring the discarded vessels to their natural uses; by its use the horse's appetite is improved, all derangements of the digestive organs corrected, rendering the skin, and giving to the coat a sleek and shining appearance.

Spiritualism.

A Paris correspondent tells the following joke at the expense of the spiritualists:—

The best anecdote of spiritualism I have heard for some time is the following. A gentleman was asked if he would like to call a spirit.

'I should,' the gentleman replied.

'Whose?' asked the medium.

'Lindley Murray's!'

Lindley Murray's ghost appeared erect, right through the table. The gentleman shuddered. All trembled. The medium was visibly affected.

'Are you the spirit of Lindley Murray?' asked the gentleman, astonished at his own courage in thus addressing a visitant of the lower world.

'Yes, I are!' boldly responded Lindley Murray's ghost.

THE CONSCIENTIOUS MUSIC.—Towards the beginning of the last century, an actor celebrated for mimicry was to have been employed by a comic author, to take off the person, manner, and singularly awkward delivery of the celebrated Dr. Woodward, who was intended to be introduced on the stage in a laughable character. The mimic dressed himself as a countryman, and waited on the Doctor with a long catalogue of ailments which he said afflicted his wife. The physician heard with amazement of diseases and pains of the most opposite nature, repeated and redoubled on the wretched patient: for since the actor's greatest wish was to keep Dr. Woodward in his company as long as possible, that he might make more observations on his gestures, he loaded his poor imaginary spouse with every infirmity which had any probable chance of prolonging the interview. At length, having completely accomplished his errand, he drew from his purse a guinea, and with a bow and scrape made an uncouth offer of it. "Put up thy money poor fellow," cried the Doctor, put up thy money. Thou hast need of all thy cash, and all thy patience too, with such a bundle of diseases tied to thy back." The comedian returned to his employer, and related the whole conversation with such true feelings of the physician's character that the author was convulsed with laughter. But his raptures were soon checked, when the mimic told him, with emphatic sensibility, that he would sooner die, than prostitute his talents to the rendering such genuine humanity a public object of ridicule.

THE OLD GUARD OF NAPOLEON.—After the treaty of peace of Tilsit the most friendly intercourse existed between Napoleon and the Emperor of Russia, and they were often seen riding or walking together without an escort. On one occasion, as the two Emperors were leaving the palace arm in arm, Alexander's attention was arrested by the appearance of a grenadier of the Old Guard, who stood sentry at the gate. This war-worn veteran had his face literally divided by a scar of a sabre cut, extending from the left brow to the left side of the chin. Noticing Alexander's look of surprise Napoleon remarked:—'What do you think brother of soldiers who survive such wounds?'

And you, brother, replied the Russian Empero, what do you think of the soldiers who inflicted those wounds?

Before Napoleon could find a suitable answer to this home thrust, the old soldier, who stood at "present arms," as stiff as a statute, glowed audibly from under a grizzly moustache, and without moving a muscle:

They are dead, those!

Ah! brother, said Alexander, laughing, here again the victory is yours!

It is, replied Napoleon, because here again my Old Guard stood by me.

One of the most conscientious Dutchmen ever known was porter in accommission house in Cincinnatti, who sometimes sold some merchandise when the proprietors were absent. He was a good salesman and a pretty good judge of money, but in one of his sales he took in a very suspicious looking $5 bill, and when the book-keeper took it to the bank, the bank refused it and pronounced it spurious, but said that it was an excellent imitation. The book-keeper returned it to the porter, and told him to return it to the party of whom he received it. About a week afterwards, the book keeper thinking he had time to see the party and get another note asked the porter if he had returned the spurious bill? 'Vell,' he said, 'dat man vot gave me dat bill he didn't coined around already, and some days I tinks de bill vas good, and some days I tinks de bill vas bad; and so one of dem days dat I tinks de bill vas good I passed him out!'

Dr. Francis was a wag, and once, when early peas were on the table, he emptied the contents of his snuff-box over them. 'Francis Francis!' exclaimed a friend, 'what are you about?' 'I have them that way,' was the answer. He, of course had the dish to himself, and when he had concluded, exclaimed, 'You thought it was snuff, did you? Nothing but black pepper.'

And one would suppose the employment of sewing was the most peaceful and quiet occupation in the world; and yet it is absolutely horrifying to hear ladies talk of stilettos, bodkins, gathering, surgings, hemmings, gorings, cuttings, whippings, lacings, What a list of, abominables.

A gentleman lately complimented a lady on her improved appearance. You are guilty of flattery, said the lady. Not so, replied he, for I vow you are as plump as a partridge. At first, said the lady, I thought you guilty of flattery only, but you are now actually making game of me.'

Charles the Second's politeness did not desert him even in his last moments. He apologized to the courtiers around his death-bed for having 'been an unconscionable time a dying, but hoped they would excuse him.

A contemporary suggests that a lady on putting on her corsets, is like a man who drinks to drown grief because in so-la-cing herself she is getting tight.

A Bankrupt was condoled with the other day for his embarrassment. 'Oh, I'm not embarrassed at all,' he said; its my creditors that are embarrassed.

A French princess being told that the poor in Paris were dying of starvation, said, What silly people! Before I'd starve I'd eat bread and mutton.

It is related of the great artist Poussin that, being shown a picture by a person of rank, he remarked, 'You only want a little poverty, sir, to make a good painter.

Never despair. If the stream of life freezes put on skates.

When is a greyhound not a greyhound? When it turns a hare.

MEDICAL DISPENSARY,

Over 139 King St. East,

TORONTO.

For the cure of

CHRONIC AND SECRET DISEASES!

And all Female Complaints.

UNFORTUNATES READ.

YOUNG MEN WHO ARE TROUBLED with weakness generally, caused by a bad habit in youth, which produces constitutional debility, you can rely on our remedies, for we have treated over fifty thousand patients, and we guarantee a perfect cure in all cases.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES.

Our PERIODICAL DROPS will bring on the monthly sickness in cases of obstruction from any cause, and after all other remedies of the kind have been tried in vain.

NEW REMEDIES AND QUICK CURES.—For Syphilis at ictures, seminal weakness, pains in the joints, affections of the kidneys, diseases of the head, throat, nose and skin, and all those dreadful affections arising from a secret habit of youth, which produces constitutional debility, renders marriage impossible, and in the end destroys both body and mind, the treatment we adopt is the result of upwards of thirty years experience and successful practice in Europe and America.

Address Dr. T. C. CULVER, 139 King Street East, Toronto, C. W.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any Cologne, used to bathe the face and persons, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headache, &c. It is manufactured from the rich sweet-brier Magnolia, and has obtained a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with entertainers and opera singers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by Demas Barnes & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

"Jes' so!"—"Exactly!"—Solon Shingle said; they were there "every time." If he felt "out-key" in the morning, he took Plantation Bitters; if he felt weary at night, he took Plantation Bitters; if he lacked appetite, was weak, languid or in mildly oppressed, he took Plantation Bitters; and they never failed to set him on his pins again and firm.

Few persons want any better authority; but as some may, just read the following:

" " " " I owe much to you, for I verily believe the Plantation Bitters have saved my life.

REV. W. H. WAGONER, Madrid, N. Y.

" " " " I have taken a great sufferer from Dyspepsia, and had to abandon preaching. " " The Plantation Bitters have cured me

REV. C. A. MILLWOOD, New York City.

" " " " I had lost all appetite—was on weak and emaciated I could hardly walk, and had a perfect dread of society. " " " The Plantation Bitters have set me all right.

JAMES HEMINWAY, St. Louis, Mo."

" " " " The Plantation Bitters have cured me of a derangement of the Kidneys and Urinary Organs, that distressed me for years. They act like a charm.

C. C. MOORE, 254 Broadway, N. Y."

Mrs. O. M. DEVOE, manager of the Union Home School for Soldiers' Children, says she "has given it to the weak and invalid children under her charge, with the most happy and gratifying results." "I have received over a hundred reams of such certificates, but no advertisement is so effective as what people themselves say of a good article. Our fortune and our reputation is at stake. The original quality and high character of these goods will be sustained under every and all circumstances. They have already obtained a sale in every town, village, par sh and hamlet among civilized nations. Base imitators try to come as near our name and style as they can, and because a good article cannot be sold as low as a poor one, they find some apart from parties who do not care what they sell. Be on your guard. See our private stamp over the cork.

Over a Million Dollars Saved!

Gentlemen:—"I had a negro man worth $1,200 who took cold from a bad hurt in the leg, and was useless for over a year. I had used everything I could hear of without benefit, until I tried the Mexican Mustang Liniment.—It soon effected a permanent cure."

J. L. DOWNING.

Montgomery, Ala., June 17, 1859.

"I take pleasure in recommending the Mexican Mustang Liniment as a valuable and indispensible article for Sprains, Sores, Scratches or Galls on Horses. Our men all say it acts like magic."

J. W. HEWITT,
Foreman for America, Wells, Fargo's and Herndon's Express

"The Sprain of my daughters ankle, occasioned while skating last winter, was entirely cured in one week, after she commenced using your celebrated Mustang Liniment.

ED. PERLEY."

Gloucester, Mass., Aug 1, 1865.

It is an admitted fact that the Mexican Mustang Liniment performs more cures in shorter time, on man and beast, than any article ever discovered. Families, livery-men and painters should always have it on hand. Quick and sure it certainly is. All genuine is wrapped in steel-plate engravings, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook Chemist, and the private U. S. stamp of Demas Barnes & Co over the top.

An effort has been made to counterfeit it with a cheap stone plate label. Look closely!

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

It is a most delightful Hair Dressing.
It eradicates scurf and dandruff.
It keeps the hair rich, soft and glossy.
It prevents hair turning gray and falling off.
It restores hair upon prematurely bald heads.
This is just what Lyon's Kathairon will do
It is pretty—it is cheap—durable. It is literally sold by the car-load, and yet its almost increasing, until there is hardly a country store in it that does not keep it, or a family that does not use it.

E. THOMAS LYON, Chemist, N. Y.

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

Who would not be beautiful? Who would not add to their beauty? What gives that marble purity and distingue appearance we observe upon the stage, and in the city belle? It is no longer a secret. They use Hagan's Magnolia Balm its continued use removes tan, freckles, pimples and roughness, from the face and hands, and leaves the complexion smooth, transparent, blooming and ravishing. Unlike many cosmetics, it contains no material injurious to the skin. Any Druggists will order it for you, if not on hand, at 50 cts per bottle.

W. E. HAGAN, Troy, N. Y., Chemist.
DEMAS BARNES & Co.,
Wholesale Agents, N. Y.

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

Helmstreet's inimitable Hair Coloring is not a dye. All ingredients of dyes are composed of lunar caustic, and more or less destroy the vitality and beauty of the hair. This is the original Hair Coloring, and has been growing in favor over twenty years. It restores gray hair to its original color by gradual absorption, in a most remarkable manner. It is also a beautiful hair dressing. Sold in two sizes—50 cents and $1—by all dealers.

C. HEINSTREET, Chemist.

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

Lyon's Extract of Pure Jamaica Ginger—for indigestion, Nausea, Heart-burn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, Flatulency, &c, where a warming stimulant is required. Its careful preparation and entire purity makes it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cts. per bott'e. Ask for "Lyon's" Pure Extract. Take no other.

CASTLES IN THE AIR.

Vanity of vanities, saith the Preacher, all is vanity—Eccl.

Castles in the air! how vain,
How foolish they appear,
When blown like chaff before the blast
By worldly wisdom's sneer!
Yet hath not rejoiced among
Those visions pure and fair?
The heart is cold—nay, something worse
That never wandered there.

Why dreams man thus, ere he hath been
On life's rough billows toss'd?
Is it the radiance, lingering still,
Of glory gone, and lost?
Vain questions. When amid storm things
A few years we have spent,
We laugh at all these dreams; but yet
It is sad merriment.

Smile not—the castles great men build,
What are they after all?
A little while they tower, and then
They totter to their fall.
Their glory like the sun in clouds,
Is blurred by every blast,
And "mournfully, oh, mournfully,"
It often sets at last.

Columbus view upon the deck,
While darkness reigns around,
Watching intense the moving light—
Another world is found!
See him again, in Spain's dark streets,
Night lowering overhead,
The new world-finder does not know
Where he may find a bed!

Trace Wolsey from his birth obscure,
The more than regal power,
Then mark—line to the prophet's gourd,
It withered in an hour;
And "broken with the storms of Fate,"
In penitential tones,
The old man begs a "little earth"
Wherein to lay his bones!

See Cromwell, after all his toil,
Through carnage, schemes and strife,
Afraid that every robe conceals
The fierce assassin's knife;
And in his palace see him die
In darkness, doubt and gloom,
Lest fearful retribution wait
His soul beyond the tomb.

Behold the Corsican in youth,
Poor, friendless, silent, pale;
Is there aught in that thoughtful face
To fill a marvellous tale?
Ay, much—dreams are hovering there.
And they were realised;
His, were not castles in the air,
By plodding men despised.

Now with his hosts on Alpine heights,
His banners flout the sky;
Now high in chair of state he speaks,
Thrones shake, kings bow, men fly.
Last scene—of power, of honor stripped,
Deserted he expires;
No wife, no child, to shed the "drops
The closing eyes requires."

Thus, with the great it ever hath been,
Through every age and land;
Their castles, if not built in air,
Were "founded on the sand!"
Then call not castle building weak,
Fools, pastime mere insanity;
A mournful truth the Preacher taught,
Who said that "All is vanity"

Literature.

TOO MUCH OF A GOOD THING.

BY CLARA AUGUSTA.

There is one thing in which I think novelist make a great mistake. If they particularly desire to enlist the sympathies of their readers for their hero, or heroine, they represent him, or her, as alone in the world, destitute of relatives or friends, with no uncle no aunt, or even a country cousin to fall back upon.

Now, to my mind, such a situation is the acme of this.

Everybody who reads this will call me a brute; but I wish, before he judges me, he would wait until he is the youngest of sixteen children; born of a mother who was afflicted with twelve brothers and sisters, and son of a father who has ten sisters living.

That is my situation—the situation of James Franklin Brown, of Brownville.

I cannot remember the time when my relatives were not a source of trouble to me. All through my childhood I was pestered with aunts. They wanted to kiss me and though I never objected to being kissed by the ladies in general, I do object to the monopoly of aunts And, besides, all of my aunts but one took snuff; and she smoked.

As I grew older, my uncles became my trial. They wanted me to do chores.—They were all settled down near my father's residence—most of them farmers; and if the sheep got in the field, or the horses jumped out of the pasture, or the cat eat up the chickens, Jim was called upon to attend to the matter. It's the greatest wonder in the world that I did not run my feet off before I reached the age of young manhood.

When I reached the period of being tortured with the tie of my cravat, and agonized about the gloominess of my dickies, then my cousins came down upon me with their wants. If they wanted to go to a concert, or singing-school, or lecture, or dance, why there was cousin Jim. Of course, cousin Jim would be delighted to go

And cousin Jim would go; and they would flirt with some other fellows, who were not cousins, all the evening; and likely enough get to sleep going home, and leave cousin Jim the privilege of whistling to the moon for amusement.

When I was about twenty, my father removed to Boston. Twelve of my brothers and sisters were married; two were at school; and only Ellen and myself were left at home.

I was delighted with the change. We should be relieved from our relatives—Most of them were thoughtful of their money, and would not likely to spend fifteen or twenty dollars in visiting us.

I began to make myself into a gentleman. I patronized the barber and his cosmetic—and cultivated a moustache, which was my beau ideal of perfection. I wore bright-colored neck-ties, and sported a gold watch, and invested three dollars in a rattan, and six dollars in a beaver, which always gave me the headache, and made me look precisely like an inverted candle-mold. But no matter for that, so long as I was fashionable.

I made the acquaintance of several charming young ladies, among whom was Miss Flora Van Voorhies, the belle of the street on which we lived. Flora was a beauty, and one of the most fastidious creatures in the world. Nothing was quite good and elegant enough for her. She would not have breathed the common air if she could have conveniently dispensed with it; and if the soles of her dainty boots touched the soil of mother earth, it affected Flora's nerves so badly, that she had a headache for hours afterward.

I was raised to the seventh heaven and lemon-colored kids by her preference; and every night I devoutely prayed that none of my relatives would appear and nip the whole thing in the bud.

Five months rolled away, and I began to feel at ease. None of them had troubled us, and we had not heard from them in any way. I indulged the hope that they had forgotten us. So, I think, did my mother, who had become quite genteel, and had formed some very genteel acquaintances.

One morning, while Mrs. S. St. Michel, and Mrs. Leroy, two of our most distinguished acquaintances, were in the parlor with my mother, one of the railway hacks stopped at our front door. An indefinable dread seized me. I felt myself growing cold as a pealed frog. From the back there issued three band-boxes, two trunks, a butter-box, a handled basket, a bundle in brown paper, an umbrella, and, lastly, a green poke bonnet, beneath which I distinguished the little wizened face of my father's oldest sister:—aunt Sally Nutter. The very black sheep of the whole flock of relatives!

'Bring 'em all right into the entry,' she called, in a stentorian voice, to the coachman; 'I'm to home here. This is brother Jason's house. Ya! ! got up in the world sense he used to peddle lobsters! It was a lucky thing for him when he went to making pills, and got doctor hitched on before his name! I expect Martha's so big you can't tech her with a ten foot pole.—But law! she needn't try to put on no extras with me! I know 'em all, root and branch! egg and bird!' and she burst into the room, carrying her basket, and bandboxes.

The blinds were drawn, and aunt Sally's foot struck against an ottoman, which brought her down, basket, bundles, and all to the floor. The cover of the basket flew off, and out rolled several dozen of eggs—most of which were smashed by the fall, but some were in a good state of preservation.

'Consarn it!' cried aunt Sally, struggling from the ruins, 'there goes seven dozen of eggs! And I brung 'em up here to git thirty cents a dozen; they hain't but fifteen at Brownville! What on airth do you have your house so dark for? Anybody sick, or dead, or gwine to be? It smells mouldy here? Do open a winder, so I can see an inch before my nose!'

My mother, red and discomposed, threw open a blind. Aunt Sally rushed up to her.

'Why, Martha, how tickled I am to see you! You look as natral as life, only, seems to me, you begin to show your age! Well, tain't to be wondered at! A woman that's brung up so many children as you have, when she gets to be fifty year old, will naturally begin to look old! And here's Jim, I declare! why, how you've growd! But, I must say, you hain't apt to. He's a going to be the express image of his old frantier Bewly—hain't he, Martha! Just the same drop to his under jaw! But who's these, ere people here? Some of yer city friends, I reckon?'

Mrs. Leroy lifted her eye-glass, and surveyed aunt Sally with ill-concealed contempt.

'Ha! ha! I reckon you'es nigh-sighted, marm; thought so the minit I seed your eyes. Eyes that is kinder faded out, and reddish, like yourn, is apt to be weel—Ever tried red rose leaves steeped in milk?'

Mrs. Leroy arose, and drew her skirts around her. Her face was as red as her eyes. She spoke very pointedly.

'I think I will be going, Mrs. Brown; you have other company vastly more amusing.'

My poor mother stammered out something, and followed the ladies into the hall. Aunt Sally brought up the rear, crying out.

'You'd better do suuthin' for your eyes rite off! They look dreadfully! I can see it clean here!'

My mother drew my aunt back.

'I will show you up stairs, now, if you please,' said she.

'Oh, so! thank ye. I don't keer about seeing your house jest yet. There'll be time enuff for that; for, if I like Boston, I calkerlate to stay four or five weeks! I'm tired, now; them pesky keers has enamost shook me all to pieces. And then your roads here is so rocky, I got all jounced up! If I lived here, I'd have the rocks picked out of the roads, if I had to do it myself.'

I seized my hat and left the house. I was too much excited to remain in aunt Sally's society any longer at present.—Anything was better than staying at home with her.

I rushed down the first street that offered; but, my course was soon stopped by a crowd, among which the star of a policeman shone conspicuous.

'I say I didn't do it!' cried a somewhat familiar voice, pitched on an extremely high key. 'I tell you I didn't tech it; and if you don't let me alone, I'll knock you down, by hocky! Hallo! there a my cousin Jim! He knows me, and he'll tell you that I'm just as honest a fel'er as the day is long!'

I shuddered. Here was another of my relatives; and at a little distance I recognized the gloomy title of Dick Van Voorhies—Flora's brother.

'I say, Jim!' cried my cousin, Tom Brown, flourishing his arms at me, 'come here, this minit, and tell this man that I hain't a pick pocket! I say, Jim!'

'I do not know you!' stammered I; and taking a step backward, I stumbled over the stand of a candy and apple-woman, upsetting the whole concern, and myself besides. The woman was angry, as she had a right to be; and she called me some hard names in a very strong brogue, and hit me two severe blows with a long-handled, two quart scoggin!

I scrambled to my feet and fled, hearing, as I went, the flattering remark from a bystander,

'He looks more like a pickpocket than tother one! Shouldn't wonder if he was the one! He's got a real hang-dog expression!'

I plunged into the first cross-street that offered, and came upon George Seaward, a young sprig of the aristocracy, with whom I had an acquaintance. He gave me a segar, and we walked up the street together, smoking, and making remarks on the ladies we met.

A coal cart came rattling along, and a lusty voice sung out,

'Hallo! if there haint cousin Jim Brown! Jim, I say, look up here and see Sam Smith, won't you! Shake hands with a feller, do;' and he extended toward me a paw which, for size, would have fitted a Hercules, and, for color, an Ethiopian.

I made a dodge into a back yard of a house, the inmates of which set a dog on me; and, inspired by the stanchness of his bark, I managed to escape into another yard, by climbing over the fence, and leaving my hat and coat-tails behind me as a souvenir!

In my mad flight through yard No. 2, I nearly overturned a young woman who was hanging clothes on a line. I opened my mouth to apologize, but she seized me by the arm with an exclamation of delight,

'Why, Jim Brown, I declare! don't you know me? Me, your cousin Nelly?'

I broke from her; and no grass grew under my feet until I was safe in my own chamber. I sunk down complete y exhausted, wondering if the entire population of Boston consisted of my relations.

Suddenly, I remembered that I was going to the theatre that night with Flora.—I must put my hair in papers, and perfume my moustache.

At dinner, aunt Sally eyed me curiously, and asked me what I had got my hair rolled up for. She guessed there was a going to be a quilting somewheres, she said.—My mother, unfortunately, informed her that I was going to the theatre. From that moment my doom was sealed.

That was the very place, of all others, that aunt Sally wanted to visit. And she could go with me just as well as not, if not more so,' she said, complacently.

I dressed myself, when the time came, and hurried out at a side-door, determined to baffle aunt Sally; but the old lady was too sharp for me. There she sat, composedly, on one of the stone lions that flanked the gateway, dressed in a flounced, pink calico, and a yellow bonnet, waiting for me.

'I'm all ready,' she remarked, jumping up; 'and I've took my work bag along, with some crackers in it. If it holds in till after nine o'clock, we shall want a lunch to.'

We stepped into the street. The people stared at us. I felt as red a full-blown poppy. My face streamed with perspiration. I could not endure it; it was no use. Politeness ignored in this case. I took advantage of the old lady's rapt gaze at the window of a print-shop to bolt down a by-street; and in a few minutes I was in the presence of my divine Flora. We walked leisurely to the theatre; I at my ease—for I knew that the old lady never could find her way, unassisted to the theatre.

Judge, then, of my horror, when, on reaching the place of amusement, the first spectacle that greeted my eye was aunt Sally, standing in the door, her work-bag on her arm, her voice raised to its highest tension, and her right hand gesticulating to the crowd she had gathered around her.

'He went out of sight just like a flash!' she was saying; 'and I gave a little boy ten cents to show me the way here—and I am a waiting for him to come along. I'm kinder afeared he's got lost, for he was also rather weak-headed; but, seeing as if he might have asked somebody the way; he's got a tongue in his head——Hallo! there he's now, and the Queen of England with him, by her gound! Come along, Jim; the mestin's jest a goin to begin! They're a tooting on the base-viol now! Where on airth did you go to so quick? Is that your gal?'

Indignation and dismay held me silent. Flora's face was like a blush-rose. The crowd, by a great effort, restrained themselves from cheering the old lady; but it was very evident to me that they would not long exercise any such forbearance.

'Jim,' said my an ient relative, in a confidential whisper, loud enough to be heard by the whole assembly, 'you're got some smart onto your upper lip! I seed it before we start d, but I didn't like to say nothing. You'd better wipe it off; it looks dreadfully!'

The crowd fairly roared. Snut, indeed! my cherished mustache, that I had scented and oiled, and admired for three long months! If the old lady had been a man, I should have challenged her on the spot. With a desperate effort I addressed Flora,

'Flora, my dear, we will go in, and not pay any regard to this insane old woman.'

Flora turned toward me, an iron determination in her blue eye.

'Frank,' she said—she always called me Frank—'tell me who that horrible old creature is before I go another step!'

'Horrid critter! I hain't a horrid critter!' cried aunt Sally, waving her work-bag. 'I'm a decent woman, and hain't got no paint on my face, as some folks that I know of has. And I'm Jim Brown's own aunt—his father's sister, Sally, that married a Nutter; and I've mended his pinny-fores and trowsers many a time!'

Flora listened; and when aunt Sally finished, she cast upon me such a look!

'Mr. Brown,' she said quietly, 'I have the honor to wish you a very good evening, with your estimable relative;' and then she took the arm of Fitz Ludlow, and sailed away.

I thought I should have fainted on the spot; and, perhaps, I should, if I had not felt my sleeve vehemently pulled. I turned and saw a lean-faced man.

'Jim,' said he, 'lend your uncle five dollars, do. I're left my pocket-book to hum!'

Good gracious! it was uncle Solomon French! and behind him was my uncle Bill; and behind him my aunt Mary, and cousin Susan. I did not stop to see how many more there was. I took it for granted that the whole audience was to be composed of my relatives. I jumped down the steps, and fled at the top of my speed. Aunt Sally cried at the extent of her lungs,

'Stop him! Stop him! I'll give a quarter to the man that captivates him!'

Community at large at once decided that I must be a thief, or a murderer; and they rushed after me at railway speed. A dozen dogs joined in the chase, making night hideous with their howling. I was in too much of a hurry to keep a very keen lookout for obstacles; and the first thing I knew, I ran headlong over a lady drawing a baby-carriage.

Of course she was angry. She seized the baby with one hand, and my shoulder with the other, and began a lecture in language more forcible than polite. I tore myself loose and renewed my flight.

But they overtook me. I had committed a crime which people never overlook; I had abused a woman with a baby—so they said. I deserted death on the spot.

A couple of policemen came up opportunely. They made a little flourish of authority, and marched me off to the watch-house.

In that interesting school of morals I remained until the next morning, when my examination took place; and no one appearing against me, I was discharged.

But I would not go home. Aunt Sally was still there; perhaps a dozen more of my relatives; since 'it never rains but it pours.'

A bright thought struck me. I would put the ocean between us. A whaler was lying at one of the wharves, which was advertised to sail that very day. I went down there, entered my name on the book, got a seaman's rig, and presented myself to the captain for inspection. He received me with open arms.

'Why, Jim!' he exclaimed, 'how glad I am to see you! My dear cousin——'

'Good heavens!' cried I.

'Yes!' said he. 'I am your own cousin David; and your cousins Daniel, and George, are among the crew; and your aunt Peggy is going as far as Florida for her health.'

I waited to hear no more. The vessel was just putting off; but I could swim! Yes, thank heaven! I could swim! And without so much as saying good-bye, I dashed into the water, and struggled to the shore, to be met by aunt Sally, who exclaimed,

'Better go right home, Jimmy, and change your stockings. Wet feet is dreadful apt to bring on the rheumatiz. Don't mind him, captain!' yelled she, after the receding vessel; 'he was allers a little weak in the upper story!'

I broke from aunt Sally—went to a hotel—dried my clothing—got into a railway car—went to Philadelphia, and enlisted in the army; and my captain is my uncle Saul; and I have three cousins in my company, and five more in another regiment with which ours is brigaded.

Did ever a poor fellow have such luck? If I should ever be found, some fine morning, at the end of a rope, it will all be the fault of my relatives.

The Exchequer Past and Present.

Antiquaries tell us—but will not vouch for the fact—that the name "Exchequer" was derived from the particoloured and chequered cloth that covered the table round which the barons sat to receive and pay out moneys on royal account; those prismatic configurations being supposed to afford certain mechanical helps to the process of computation on both sides. But this belonged only to the court or the chamber where the barons sat. The real exchequer was simply a big money-box, into which the receipts were poured, and from which all the royal payments were paid.—When Falstaff recommended Prince Hal to "rob me the exchequer," the exchequer was really a box worth robbing. That it has been robbed in another fashion, and to much greater extent, we need not waste time in proving. At that period the royal money was practically kept in the shape of specie, in a strong chest, locked with three keys—because, as an old historian of the exchequer phrases it, "a threefold cord is not easily broken"—which keys were entrusted to three different functionaries, one of them being the officer who carried the seals of the department, and was called accordingly Cancellarius, or Chancellor of the Exchequer. The box with its three keys, became, of course, a fiction when, after the Revolution of 1688, the national revenue passed under parliamentary control, when the National Debt arose, and the Bank of England assumed its high position as the public body to which the State owed most money, from whence it drew its supplies of ready cash, and with whom, in return, it had mortaged, more or less completely, the proceeds of future revenues. Yet for nearly a hundred years after this change had been practically effected, the old fiction of the strong box and its three keys was kept up, for the reasons we have already explained. The "box" was existent in some upper room in Whitehall, and every afternoon an employee from the Bank brought down the calculated receipts from the day's revenue, as derived from all manner of taxes; and the amount, being represented by "specie" notes, was gravely counted over and solemnly interred in the steel-bound chest, which was afterwards carefully locked by the three well-colored officials, each with his separate key. This solemn farce is now discontinued; yet, to the present moment, whenever the Chancellor of the Exchequer is required to appear in his golden robes of state, he bears among the rest of the paraphernalia a golden key, as typifying the iron instrument formerly carried with a very practical intent.—Our Own Fireside.

American Monitors and English Iron-Clads.

From the London Times, June 23.

It is said that the present war actually originated in a new fire-arm. Count Bismark thought the needle-gun would render the Prussian army irresistable, and so he secured the opportunity of breaking up the old system of Europe to reconstruct it afresh.—The presumption must be a little over-strained, but Marshall Benedek alludes to it in his address to his soldiers, and there is truth enough in the idea to fix our attention on the great question at issue. Muskets and cannon now constitute the reliance of nations, and the Prussians have developed one of these instruments, and the Americans another. A Prussian battalion is said to be a match by means of its needle-gun, for three battalions armed with the ordinary musket, and an American monitor is expected to be superior to any other nation in the world. On one of these points it is but too likely that we shall soon have evidence in abundance, and on the other we know more that we did, for a real monitor has just crossed the Atlantic, and is now lying in British waters.

The American Monitor is literally a floating gun-carriage, and nothing more. She has not the least resemblance to any ordinary man-of-war either in shape or arrangements, but she does carry guns—enormous ones too—and the Miantonomah has carried them across the Atlantic.—These guns weigh upwards of twenty tons, they have a bore of fifteen inches, and they throw a 480 pound shot. The Monitor has two turrets, and two of these guns are carried in each. Now, if the calibre of a gun is to decide the advantage in an action, we have certainly nothing to match the battery of the Miantonomah. In our latest and most successful specimen of a fighting ship we have got just half-way to the point reached by the Americans. The Bellerophon carries guns weighing upwards of 12 tons, and throwing 250 pound shot. Those are our heaviest and most powerful cannon, whereas the Italian iron-clad has just sailed for the Adriatic carrying 600-pounders, and the Americans, we are told, have already cast guns more than twice as big as those of the Miantonomah. Either, then, the advantage does not belong exclusively to the largest gun, or that advantage does not belong to us. But there is another feature of the American specimen deserving attention. This Monitor, though carrying 450-pounders, is but of 1 500 tons burden. Now, our newest model of a light cruiser is the Pallas—Mr. Reed's vessel—and she is of 2,400 tons burden, though her guns are only a quarter as big as those of the Miantonomah. Even Captain Cowper Coles has not yet proposed to build a two-turret vessel of less burden than 3,000 tons, or double that of the Monitor. Consequently the Americans are far ahead of us in combining light tonnage with heavy armament. Of course, there are other points for consideration, where the monitor might not appear to so much advantage. The speed of the Miantonomah, for instance, in her voyage across the Atlantic, was but seven knots an hour, and her maximum is only put at nine. Either the Warrior or the Achilles, therefore, would run round her with ease. Then her enormous guns are of a very peculiar pattern and capacity. They are made to throw very heavy shot with a very low velocity, a principle not approved by artillerists in this country. In fact, we have no evidence of the actual power of the Dahlgreen gun against really good armor-plating, nor is it certain that the 300-pounders of the Bellerophon, if tried against the Hercules target, would not prove as effective as the 450-pounders of the Miantonomah. What the Americans have shown is this—that they can send 450-pound guns to sea in a 1,500-ton vessel. We are not disposed to give all the credit to foreign nations and none to our own, and we trust it may not prove that in this matter we have once more fallen a stage in arrear of the rest of the world. Still, whereas it would, no doubt, have been thought a great thing three or four years ago to send an ironclad to sea carrying 64-ton guns, and yet of only 2,400 tons burden, we here see an American vessel with three times as heavy an armament, though of not much more than half the tonnage. Nor do we suppose that the Pallas is much quicker than the Miantonomah, though she is probably more seaworthy and a good deal more habitable. The Americans, however, are reconstructing their navy on a double principle. They have their Monitors for enormous ordnance and angular defensive power, but they have also cruisers built especially for speed, though carrying very powerful guns. They are recognizing two classes of vessels—one built solely for offensive and defensive power, the other for power in combination with extraordinary speed. Our first-rate ironclads are probably unequaled for the union of all these qualities together. The Minotaur is said to be one of the fastest men-of-war in the world; she is strongly plated, and she could carry 300-pound guns; but then the 300-pound gun is probably the heaviest that she could carry, whereas even now 600-pounders are afloat. It will not do, however, to be left behind in a race like this. We have been conducting experiments so deliberately and fastidiously that other nations, either less sceptical or more easily convinced, have got practically ahead of us. We have no doubt that many a fruit could be found both in American and Italian iron-clads, but, in the meantime, their weight of metal is far in excess of ours and there is a strong and growing presumption that in future actions weight of metal may carry the day.

Some people take more care to hide their wisdom than their folly.

Interesting Love Episode.

How powerful, yet how mysterious a thing is love! It reigns supreme over all, subduing by its gentle sway the monarch and the peasant, the merchant prince and the vendor of stale gingerbread and bad cigars, the old and the young, the rich and the poor, the powerful and the lowly—none are free from Cupid's piercing darts.

Sandy K., a gay and festive youth of fifty-three summers, had bestowed the wealth of his juvenile affections on the fair and lovely Lizzie L. But, alas! the "best laid schemes of mice and men gang aft agley." Though he had often laid his hand and fortune at her feet—though he had frequently bent the suppliant knee at beauty's shrine, and implored the darling object of his undivided affections to become his own, the fickle fair one continued obdurate and refused to reciprocate the attachment.—Maddened at length by the annihilation of all his visions of future bliss and with the fierce fires of jealousy burning in his tortured brain, the victim of misplaced affections had the delicate and charming Lizzie arrested and confined in the Lock-up on the charge of feloniously stealing our hero's shirts! The prospect was gloomy for our heroine; to all appearances she was about to be engulphed in the fiery flood of affliction, but the darkest hour of night is just before the dawning of the day. When Sandy thought of his charmer confined in that undignified receptacle of the wicked and filthy rascals who fall victims to the rapacity of our worthy Chief Constable, his adamantine gizzard relented, and he hastened to the relief of his adorable Lizzie. It was a sight for a painter's pencil; when the two met, they frantically threw themselves into each other's arms. Their faults were acknowledged; past grievances were freely forgiven, and in that vile lodging-house their pure vows were plighted. Sandy at once withdrew the charge of stealing the shirts, and his affianced once more breathed the free air of heaven. A clergyman was sent for, and the reconciled lovers were united in Hymen's silken bands. The ceremony over, they hastened to a neighboring grocery and procured the necessary articles for commencing house-keeping, consisting of a half-penny's worth of mustard, 4lb of tea, 4lb sugar, a small loaf of bread, and three gallons of "tangle-leg." A suitable residence was at once selected, and the happy pair commenced keeping house. That evening, the Guelph Tin Band, consisting of eight superannuated tin milk-pans, and three dinner horns, paid them a visit and concoursed sweet music before the domicile of the now wedded couple No cards.—Guelph Advertiser.

England—By Henry Ward Beecher

"The proudest sovereign in the world is Queen Victoria. She dignifies womanhood and motherhood, and she is fit to sit in empire. There is one reason why the English throne is the strongest also, because it is so many legged. It stands on thirty millions people. It represents the interests of the masses of the subjects. Another reason why England is the strongest nation, because it has the most moral power. It has more than we have. We like to talk about ourselves on the 4th of July—we love to fan ourselves with eulogies. I know England's stubborn conceit—I know how many things are mischievous among her common people, among her operatives of the factory, among her serfs of the mine; but taking her up on one side and down on the other, there is not another nation that represents so much Christianity as Old England. If you do not like to hear it, I like to say it: and the strongest power on the face of the globe to-day is that kingdom. It is the strongest kingdom, and the one that is the least likely to be shaken down. England has been destroyed every ten or fifteen years from the time of the Armada to the present day, in the prophecies of men.—Every few years she has been about to be overthrown by sea; she has been about to be ploughed up by land; she has been about to be stripped of her resources in India and other parts of the globe; nations have formed alliances against her; the armies and fleets of the civilized world have gone about her; her interests, political and pecuniary, have been repeatedly assailed; and yet she has stood, as she now stands, mistress of the seas, and the strongest power on earth, because she has represented the moral element.

ANOTHER LILIPUTIAN SHIP STARTS FOR EUROPE.—Another of the single-handed expeditions, the only result of which hitherto has been to secure of their projectors a fleeting popularity and a nameless grave started yesterday, in the shape of the little Yankee Doodle, twenty-six feet long and three feet wide. Its Captain is Wm. Hudson, a man of that florid complexion and light hair which denote the brave and sanguine temperament; its crew a mate of his, named Fitch, and a dog. The only points of superiority about the Yankee Doodle over the little skiff which started for Europe before are, that the former is a full-rigged ship in miniature, and has the advantage of a below deck. Else, there is not much to choose, it is to be feared, between the rashness of one and the other. The old sailor friends of the captain, who accompanied him in the steamer S. O. Pierce to the lightship off Sandy Hook yesterday, are afraid they shall never grasp their companion by the hand again. For himself, Cat. Hudson was to the last hopeful, and if coolness and courage could insure a safe passage, he would be at the Paris exhibition with his brave little ship yet. But, as this brief notice of his sailing is written, and the darkness of the night is quickly gathering over the waters, the reflection is inevitable that in the silent watches of midnight, in tempestuous seas and gales the brave man, brave even if foolhardy, will have terrible sufferings to undergo even should they rouse the goal at last.—New York Paper.

U. P. CHURCH, SCOTLAND.—The statistics of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland show that the number of congregations attached to the Synod was 592, an increase of 78 since 1836; that the membership had, within that period, risen from 152,622 to 175,752; that, excluding extra congregational givings, the contributions per member amounted to 28s. 5d., or including legacies and personal donations, 30s. 6d; the contributions for missionary objects had risen in seven years from £40,000 to £51,0 0. There were 285 stipends ranging from £90 to £150, while the other 307 ran from £150 to £600. The total number of ministers was 620; elders, 4,466; preachers, 105; students of divinity, 135; Sunday School teachers, 8,977; scholars, 72,501.

PARLIAMENT.

At Ottawa very little is being done.—Squabbling about nothing seems to be the order of the day. One by one the items of supplies are being passed. The Confederation is delayed for some time, and in the mean time the delegates from the Lower Provinces will proceed to England, but not a word of co-operation on the part of Canada. Is it possible that Canada, that had so much fuss and so much talk about Confederation, is to be the last to take the necessary steps towards its completion? Yet so it is.

There has been no debate of any moment worth giving since the opening of the present parliament, and it is likely to be prorogued without anything of importance being done. Office seems to be desired more than our country's welfare. Every one waited to here of a delegation to England to complete arrangements with the provinces, and also to establish local constitutions, but not a word about it is heard out of members of the government unless when dragged out.

THE WAR.

Very little has come to hand since our last issue, except the account of the battle which we give to-day, and which appears to have been the most bloody and determined one of modern times. Most gallantly did the Prussians attack and carry on the contest, and most resolutely was every inch of ground defended, the Austrians only giving way when compelled by dint of steel and bullets; and terrible must have been the havoc of human life. No accounts yet come of the losses, but they cannot have been less than 50,000 dead and wounded independent of prisoners. We have read of battles and one man killed; certainly the whole of such battles sink into insignificance compared with this one.

France has offered mediation between Austria and the contending parties, and an armistice was proposed but rejected by Prussia. Austria offers to cede Venetia to France, but whether Italy is satisfied to allow it is more than we yet know. So far, however, France and England are aloof, and it is hoped that they will remain so, Yet no one knows what a day may bring forth.

RAILWAY.

The Bill to amend and extend the provisions of the Act incorporating the Port Hope, Lindsay and Beaverton Railway, is by this time law. We have been favored by Col. Haultain with a copy as proposed to be amended in Committee of the whole. From it we gather that the charter is to be extended for five years. There is a clause granting power to purchase the branch to Peterboro' from interested parties. The fifth and sixth clauses read as follows:—

5. Subject to the provisions of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, the said company shall have power to construct a branch or line from the present terminus in Peterborough, to and to connect with the Peterborough and Chemong Lake Railway.

6. The said Company shall have power to construct branches or lines of Railway from any point on their main line North of Millbrook, to any mills within four miles of their said line of Railway, either constructed or authorized by this Act to be constructed.

From these, however, or anything in the Bill we cannot gather any more particulars. The Branch may now be extended, but whether the use of the Chemong road is contained in the above clause we confess ourselves unable to decide. There can be nothing wrong in using the Chemong road until the Cobourg road shall be resuscitated, if that ever takes place, and the joint occupation of the road may be just to all parties concerned. We have not yet received particulars, and therefore can merely give reports, which too often are not to be relied on.

The latest news from New York regarding the Cholera is, that it is making rapid headway and appears to be spreading over the entire metropolitan district. It broke out among the troops on Hart's Island, nine deaths occurring in one day, and ten deaths on Governor's Island Two cases proved fatal in the city out of seven, and five cases resulted fatally in Brooklyn out of 16.

A GOOD DAY'S WORK.—The fines at the Police Court, in the city of Toronto, on Saturday last amounted, in the aggregate, to $400.

The Firemen had a fine day yesterday for their pic-nic, and we believe they enjoyed it.

TOWN COUNCIL.

There have been several meetings of the Town Council of late. On Wednesday evening last there was a special meeting called, to take into consideration the propriety of erecting a Drill Shed conjointly with the County and the government.

Major Patterson, who had been invited to be present, made some explanation, and read a letter from the government, stating that provision had been made in the estimates for the erection of Drill Sheds through the province, and directing Major Patterson to take steps to find out what these Counties would do in the matter.

After some discussion, it was agreed by resolution to appropriate $1000, or whatever amount may be the Town's share of half the cost of a Drill Shed upon the basis the contribution was made to the Volunteers, viz., in proportion to assessed value; and a Committee, consisting of Messrs. Stevenson, Chamberlain, Ormond, Toole and the Mayor, was appointed to confer with the Warden and Advisory Committee on the matter.

A By-law passed through its different readings to appoint Mr. Fortye Arbitrator between the Town and County, to determine the sum to be paid by the Town for the use of the Jail and for the administration of justice.

The above Committee met the Warden and Committee, but failed to obtain any terms from them but the terms already proposed by the Council, viz., to give as much as the Town—whatever that sum would be. The two Committees, however, were agreed about the site; the old burying ground being considered the most eligible for the purpose.

On Monday evening the Town Council held another meeting. Mr. Doherty in the chair.

A communication was received from J. Anderson, asking to have his name substituted for Messrs. Nicholls and Halls, on the Assessment Roll for a certain Lot on Mc Donald street. It was received.

An account from H. Uin, amounting to $26.75, for meals furnished volunteers, was referred to the Finance Committee.

The subject of the Drill Shed being again introduced, the Special Committee reported as follows:—

To the Town Council of the Town of Peterborough.

Your Committee appointed by the resolution of this Council at its last meeting to confer with the County authorities, as to the erection of a drill shed, and to endeavor to obtain from the County a larger proportion of the expenditure than that already offered by them, beg to report as follows:—

They have communicated with the Warden and prominent members of the County Council upon the subject of the resolution, and they declined to urge upon their Council the appropriation of a sum of money larger than the sum that would be appropriated by the Town Council towards the erection of a drill shed, but that in the event of not being able to place the erection on the old burying ground they would be willing to make due allowance for the value of any site provided by the Town.

Your Committee are of opinion that the incidental advantages accruing to the Town from the erection of the building would sufficiently counterbalance any disproportion of the relative appropriations for the purpose.

Your Committee would recommend the appropriation of the sum of $1000 or one-fourth by the Town, towards the erection of the shed and the appointment of a Committee of three (that being the number of the Committee of the County Council) to act in conjunction with the Committee from the County Council, to arrange with them as to the site plans, specifications, &c., and to superintend the expenditure of the money and the erection of the building.

W. H. SCOTT.

On motion of Mr. Ewing, seconded by Mr. Miller,—Messrs. Stevenson, Toole and the Mayor were appointed a committee to act in conjunction with the Committee appointed by the County Council, to select a proper site for the Drill Shed, and to take such other steps as might be found necessary to have the work proceeded with without delay.

Mr. Fortye having declined to act as arbitrator, a By-law was passed appointing Jas. Edward's Esq., arbitrator in his Stead.

Mr. Millar gave notice of a motion to provide for the Mayor's Salary for the year.

The Council adjourned for three weeks.

From the action of the Town Council, and the liberality of the County Conneil, we may expect to have operations connected very soon. The County Council will hold a special meeting on Thursday next, to consider the whole matter and to provide the neccessary means. The only thing now required is the right to use the old Burrying ground for the purpose, but the government will no doubt, grant an act for the purpose of converting it to that use. There are but few graves there now; most of the remains of the dead have been removed by the friends of the deceased, and of the few that do remain, the changes going on have so obliterated any mark that mar have been, that their friends can not find the place where the dead bodies have been laid; therefore, the existence of graves will scarcely be raised as an obstacle by any one.

Dan Castello's Great Show.

The popular exhibition known most favorably through the States as "Dan Castello's Institution," will visit Peterborough on Wednesday the first day of August.—From what we have seen published in our exchanges we are inclined to the belief that this establishment is far superior to any that have visited the Provinces. One feature entirely dissimilar from any ever yet given is the taking of a Lion from its cage, allowing it to walk to the car and sit there free and unfettered while the procession passes through the streets. The great performances of Herr Lengel and the untamed lions are expressed as wonderful. The equine department is well filled and the list of members of the troupe comprise a number of artists of eminence. Mr. Castello will appear in person at each exhibition. Those who have heard the facetious Daniel talk, say he is the best clown who ever entered the arena.

A break in the Erie Canal occurred four miles east of Little Falls, on the 21st inst. Navigation is suspended and it is supposed that it will take from four to five days to repair it.

The details of the distress prevailing in Hungary, and generally in the eastern provinces of Austria, are truly heartrending. In the Bukovina, especially, misery drives the inhabitants to the very last extremities, parents offering to sell their children that the little ones should not die of hunger.

Garibaldi, on the 3rd, attacked the Austrians at Monte Suello. The Austrians made a strong resistance. The volunteers finally fell back in good order. Garibaldi was slightly wounded in the thigh. The ammunition of the volunteers was rendered useless by a heavy rain.

Canadian Patriotism.

We have been shown by Messrs David English, lately arrived from New York, a beautiful gold medal intended to be presented to the successful competitor at an approaching shooting match that is to take place here in about a month or six weeks. The medal is the offering of a few Peterboro Canadians who have been in New York for some time, and of whom at least a few were members of the volunteer companies here. The most of these young men were ready to return to Canada on hearing of the late raid, and only waited to hear the result of the first attempt. The successful repulsion of the Fenians from our soil caused their services not to be required, when immediately they procured this beautiful medal, made of pure gold, and forwarded it here to be presented to the best marksman in the Peterborough and Ashburnham companies. The design and execution of the medal is very beautiful. The centre contains on one side a design of Volunteers shooting at a mark, on the other side are the words "Won by ——," leaving a blank for the name of the winner. The whole is encircled with a wreath of maple leaves, all resting on a beaver, and ending in a crown, over which is a cross of rifles neatly set. The medal is worth $50, cy., and is the gift of the following young Canadians:—E. C. Lane, W. C. DeBotham, John Hughes, John J. English, Wm. Donnelly, R. Niblock, Jas. Borrowman, H. W. Hughes and David English, all of whom belonged to Peterboro, and still, it appears, cherish grateful remembrance of their home and native country. It is worth mentioning that so desirous were the donors of having the medal purely British that they sent their order to Montreal, to one of the first establishments in the city, and had the whole designed and executed there, fearing that if obtained in New York it might have even the appearance of being American. The winner, therefore, will be the wearer of a pure gold medal, of British gold, British design and a token of Canadian loyalty to British principles and the British crown. All praise to our young Canadians.

SMITH COUNCIL.

SMITH, 16th July, 1866.

The Council met. All the members present.

The minutes of last meeting were read and confirmed.

The Treasurer was directed to pay to Orlando Rodgers the sum of $50, as compensation for site of road through lot 29 in the 11th concession.

The quarterly report of the Inspector was read and adopted.

A petition was presented and read from Samuel Nugent and others, praying the Council to request Andrew Millar not to cultivate the allowance for road between lots 30 and 31 in the 10th and 11th concessions.

A By-Law to authorize the Treasurer to pay the Treasurer of the Township of Harvey the sum of $700, and to deliver up to him all accounts in his possession of taxes due by the owners of non-resident lands, in the said Township of Harvey, received its several readings and was passed.

A By-Law to provide for the expenditure of the sum of $450 in the general improvement of the roads and bridges within the municipality, received its first, second and third reading, and was passed.

A communication from the Treasurer of the County of Peterborough was read, stating that he was instructed by the Warden of the County to apply to the Treasurer of this Council to pay over to him the money collected for the re-survey of the Township of Harvey.

The Treasurer was instructed not to pay over the money collected for the re-survey of the Township of Harvey until it be satisfactorily settled to whom the same shall be paid.

The Council then adjourned until the 13th day of August next, then to meet at the Town Hall, in the Village of Bridgenorth,

An Irishman's View of Fenianism.

A "Cincinatti Irishman" writes to the Enquirer, denouncing the atrocious language of the Commercial, the leading Republican paper in that city, with respect to Canada. He say:—"The Fenian portion of our fellow citizens have wickedly anticipated the action of its gallant editor, who proposed, not long since, to raise an army in this neighborhood which should carry fire and sword through the length and breath of Canada, making it smoke with the fresh blood and burning houses of its inhabitants, like the Shenandoah Valley. I deprecate even the least attempt to carry fire and sword in Canada, whether by Sweeney, the editor of the Commercial, or any other man. Canada is the only part of the world, outside their own country, (unless perhaps Australia,) where Irishmen are treated with respect or consideration; therefore Irishmen should be the last men in the world to think of inflicting injury on the persons and property of Canadians. Then as to native Americans, they should have sufficient intelligence to know that there is not a country on the face of the earth that does not need to have a "little sanctuary," in the shape of an independent sovereignty on its borders, to which political offenders might flee for safety in times of party excitement. Hence I hold it to be sound policy for Americans unreservedly to avoid all attempts at destroying the separate nationality of Canada, seeing that no party in this country (owing to the rapid changes in politics) is at any time beyond the danger of being proscribed."

EXTRAORDINARY DECLINE IN WHEAT.—Within the past twenty-four hours the wheat market in this city has experienced a most extraordinary decline of 22c to 27c per bushel! On Tuesday No. 1 regular spring wheat was sold at $1.88 to $1.90, and yesterday it fell as low as $1.60—closing dull and nominal at $1.65. This decline in prices is the result wholly of excessive speculation. A prominent operator some time since purchased the entire stock of wheat, and two or three hundred thousand bushels besides for future delivery. In order completely to "corner" the sellers, he adopted the somewhat novel expedient of selling parcels "free on board" to shippers at 10c to 15c below the market price, for lots in store. In this way the stock was reduced quite materially, and the sellers were forced to settle at the buyer's own price. This being accomplished, he threw the balance of his wheat upon the market, and broke it down.—Chicago Tribune, 12th.

GOLD ON LAKE SUPERIOR.—The Superior (Wis.) Gazette says that it has lately been shown some buttons of gold and silver, the result of a test made by Dr. T. H. Hawes, practical chemist and assayer, of rock taken from the vein on the north shore of Lake Superior (American) on the south-east quarter of section 15, town 58, range 10, the property of Mr. E. W. Anderson, Jr. The yield in gold and silver is calculated at $80 per ton of rock. In making the test, traces of other metals were discovered. The veins of metal are supposed to extend between one and two miles east of Silver Creek along the shore. It is the intention of the proprietor to take steps for the organization of a company to prosecute the work vigorously.

The average length of passage for the past year of the Montreal Steamships has been, Westward 12 days, Eastward 10 days 22 hours.

THE BATTLE OF SADOWA.

The Greatest Conflict of Modern Times—Billy's Hillock Morgland—Awful Carnage.

From the Military Correspondence of the London Times.

HORITZ, July 3, 11 p. m.

On Monday, the 2nd of July, Prince Frederick Charles hailed with the First Army at Koniginhof, in order to allow the Crown Prince time to come up to Miletin, a town five miles east of the village of Kommenitz, and to get information of the movements of the Austrians. That afternoon he sent out two officers to reconnoitre beyond Horitz; both fell in with Austrian troops, and had to fight and ride hard to bring their information home safely. More on the Prussian right, the other reconnoitering officer also found the Austrians in force, and was obliged to retire rapidly. From the reports of these officers, and from other information, Prince Frederick Charles determined to attack, so last night he issued orders for the immediate advance of his own army beyond Horitz, and sent Lieutenant Von Normand with a letter to the Crown Prince, asking him to push forward in the morning from Miletin and attack the right flank of the Austrians, while he himself engaged them in front There was some fear that the Austrian cavalry patrols and detachments which were prowling about would intercept the aide-de-camp and stop the letter; but Van Normand succeeded in avoiding them, and got safely to the Crown Prince's headquarters, at 1 o'clock this morning, and rejoined Prince Fredrick Charles at 4, to report the success of his mission, and to bring to the leader of the First Army an assurance of the co-operation of the Second. Had this aide-de-camp been taken prisoner or killed on his way to Miletin his loss would have probably influenced the whole campaign, for on that letter depended in a great measure the issue of the days battle.

THE FIRST ARMY IN MOTION.

Long before midnight the troops were all in motion, and at half-past one in the morning the General Staff left Koniginhof. Day gradually began to dawn, but with the first symptoms of sunrise a dazzling rain came on which lasted until late in the afternoon. The wind increased and blew coldly upon the soldiers, for they were short of both sleep and food.

At daybreak the troops had taken up their positions to attack the Austrians.—The main body of the army was at Milowitz, a village on the road from Horitz to Koniggratz; the 7th Division, under Gen. Franchy, was at Ceselwitz on the left, and the 4th and 5th Divisions at the villages of Bristau and Psauch on the right; while General von Bitterfeld, with the 8th and part of the 7th corps d'armee, was sent to the town of Neubidschaw, on the right, ten miles from Milowitz. About four o'clock the army began to advance, and marched slowly up the gentle hill which leads from Milowitz to the village of Dub, five miles nearer Koniggrats. The corn lay heavy and tangled from the rain upon the ground; the skirmishers pushed through it nimbly, but the battalions which followed behind in crowded columns toiled heavily through the down-beaten crops, and the artillery horses had to strain hard on their traces to get the wheels of the gun carriages through the sticky soil. At six the whole army was close up to Dub, but it was not allowed to go upon the summit of the slope, for the ridge upon which Dub stands had hidden all its motions, and the Austrians could see nothing of the troops collected behind the crest, and perhaps thought that no Prussians were near them, except ordinary advanced posts; for the cavalry videttes which had been pushed forward thus far over night remained on the top of the ridge as if nothing were going on behind them.

SURVEY OF THE BATTLE GROUND.

From the top of the slight elevation on which the village of Dub stands, the ground slopes gently down to the river Bistritz, which the road crosses at the village of Sadowa, a mile and a quarter from Dub. From Sadowa the ground again rises beyond the Bistritz, and to the little village of Lisen, conspicuous by its church tower standing at the top of the gentle hill, a mile and a half from Sadowa. A person standing this morning on the top of the ridge saw Sadowa below him, built of wooden cottages, surrounded by orchards, and could distinguish among its houses several water mills, but these were not at work, for all the inhabitants of the village had been sent away, and a white coat here and there among the cottages was not a peasant's blouse, but was the uniform of an Austrian soldier; three quarters of a mile down the Bistritz a big red brick house, with a high brick chimney near it, looked like a manufactory, and some large wooden buildings alongside it were unmistakably warehouses; close to these a few wooden cottages, probably meant for the workmen employed at the manufactory, completed the village of Dohilnitz. A little more than a mile still further down the Bistritz stood the village of Mokrowens, like most Bohemian country villages, built of pine wood cottages encinstered in orchard trees.

At seven o'clock Prince Frederick Charles pushed forward his cavalry and horse artillery. They moved down the slope towards the Bistritz at a gentle trot, slipping about on the greazy ground, but keeping most beautiful line—the lance flags of the Uhlans, wet with the rain, flapping heavily against the staves. At the bottom of the hill the trumpets sounded, and in making their movements to gain the bridge the squadrons began wheeling and hovering about the side of the river, as if they courted the fire of the enemy. Then the Austrian guns opened upon them from a battery placed in a field near the village at which the main road crosses the Bistritz, and the battle of Sadowa began.

OPENING OF THE BATTLE.

The first shot was fired about half past 7. The Prussian Horse Artillery, close down to the river, replied to the Austrian guns, but neither side fired heavily, and for half an hour the cannonade consisted of but little more than single shots. At a quarter before eight the King of Prussia arrived on the field, and very soon after the Horse Artillery were reinforced by other field batteries, and the Prussian gunners began firing their shells quickly into the Austrian position. But as soon as the Prussian fire actively commenced, Austrian guns seemed to appear, as if by magic, in every point of the position; from every road, from every village, from the orchard of Mokrowens, on the Prussian right, to the orchard of Benatek, on the left, came flashes of fire and whizzing rifle shells, which, bursting with a sharp crack, sent their splinters rattling among the guns, gunners, carriages and horses, often killing a man or horse, sometimes dismounting a gun, but always ploughing up the earth and scattering the mud in the men's faces. But the Austrians did not confine themselves to firing on the artillery alone, for they threw their shells up the slope opposite them towards Dub, and one shell came slap into a squadron of Uhlans, who were close beside the King; hurrying itself with a heavy thud in the ground, it blew up columns of mud some 20 feet in the air, and bursting a moment after, reduced the squadron by four files.

As soon as the cannonade in front became serious, the guns of the 7th Division began to bombard the village of Benatek, on the Austrian right. The Austrians returned shot for shot, and neither side either gained or lost ground. In the centre, too, the battle was very even; the Prussians pushed battery after battery into the action, and kept up a tremendous fire on the Austrian guns, but these returned it, and sometimes with interest, for the Austrian artillery officers knew their ground, and every shell fell true; many officers and men fell, and many horses were killed or wounded. More Kranz kentragers were sent down to the batteries, and always returned carrying on stretchers men whose wounds had been hastily bound up under fire, but who seemed to be too much stunned to suffer much from pain.

Gradually the Prussian cannonade appeared to get stronger, and the Austrian batteries between Dohelnitz and Dohalicka, retired higher up the hill, but the guns at Mokrowens still stood fast, and the Prussians had not crossed the Bistritz; but many guns were now turned on Mokrowens, and at 10 o'clock the battery there was also obliged to retire a little.

DESPERATE FIGHTING IN THE VILLAGE.

It was 10 o'clock when Prince Frederick Charles sent General Steinmetz to order the attack on Sadowa, Dohalicka and Mokrowens. The columns advanced covered by skirmishers, and crossed the river knee without much loss, (save from those they had to fight every inch of their way. The Austrian infantry held the bridges and villages in force, and fired fast upon them as they approached. The Prussians could advance, but slowly along the narrow ways and against the defence of the houses, and the volleys sweeping through the ranks seemed to tear the soldiers down. The Prussians fired much more quickly than their opponents, but they could not see to take their aim; the houses, trees, and smoke from the Austrian discharges shrouded the villages. Sheltered by this the Austrian Jagers fired blindly where they could tell by hearing that the attacking columns were, and the shots told tremendously on the Prussians in their close formations; but the latter improved their positions, although slowly, and by dint of sheer courage and perseverance, for they lost men at every yard of their advance, and in some places almost paved the way with wounded. Then, to help the infantry, the Prussian artillery turned its fire, regardless of the enemy's batteries, on the villages, and made tremendous havoc among the houses. Mokrowens and Dohelnitz both caught fire, and the shells fell quickly and with fearful effect among the defenders of the flaming hamlets; the Austrian guns also played up on the attacking infantry, but at this time these were sheltered from their fire by the houses and trees between.

A PRUSSIAN BAYONET CHARGE.

In and around the villages the fighting continued for nearly an hour; then the Austrian infantry, who had been there, driven out by a rush of the Prussians, retired, but only a little way up the slope, into a line with their batteries. The wood above Sadowa was strongly held, and that between Sadowa and Benatek, teeming with riflemen, stood to bar the way of the 7th Division.—But General Fransky, who commands this division, was not to be easily stopped, and he sent his infantry into the wood, and turned his artillery on the Austrian batteries. The 7th Division began firing into the trees, but found they could not make any impression, for the defenders were concealed, and musketry fire was useless against them. Then Fransky let them go, and they dashed in with the bayonet. The Austrians would not retire, but waited for the struggle, and in the wood above Benatek was fought out one of the fiercest combats which the war has seen. The 27th Prussian regiment went in nearly 3,000 strong, with 90 officers, and came out on the further side with only two officers and between 300 and 400 men standing; all the rest were killed or wounded—The other regiments of the division also suffered much, but not in the same proportion; but the wood was carried. The Austrian line was now driven in on both flanks, but its commander formed a new line of battle a little higher up the hill, round Lisen, still holding the wood which lies above Sadowa.

Then the Prussian artillery was sent across the Bistritz, and began to fire upon the new Austrian position. At the same time the smoke of General Herwarth's advance was gradually seen moving towards the Austrian left, for he had at Nechanitz, a village about seven miles lower down the Bistritz than Sadowa, found a brigade of Saxon troops with some Austrian cavalry, and was driving them towards the position at Lisen, himself following in such a direction that it appeared he would turn the Austrian left flank. But the Austrian commander seemed determined to hold his position, and heavy masses of infantry and cavalry could be seen on the upper part of the slope.

CRITICAL POSITION OF THE PRUSSIANS.

The Prussian infantry which had taken the village of Sadowa and Dohelnitz, was now sent against the wood, which, above these places, runs along the side of the Sadowa and Lipa road. They advanced against it, but did not at first make much impression for, the Austrians being here again concealed, the fire of the needle-gun did not tell and a whole battery, placed at the far end of the wood, fired through the trees, and told on the Prussian ranks with awful effect.—But the assailants fought on, at last broke down the obstacles at the entrance and then dashed in. The fighting continued from tree to tree, and the Austrians made many a rush to recover the lost position of the woods, but in this close fighting their boyish troops went down like nine pins before the strong men of the 8th Division; but when the defenders drew back a little, and their artillery played into the trees, the Prussians suffered fearfully, and about half-way up in the wood the fight became stationary.

At this time the Austrian artillery were making splendid practice, and at one o'clock the whole battle line of the Prussians could gain no more ground, and was obliged to fight hard to retain the position it had won. At one time it seemed as if it would be lost, for guns had been dismounted by the Austrian fire, and in the wooded ground the needle-gun had no fair field, and the infantry fight was very equal.

ARRIVAL OF THE SECOND ARMY.

The first army was certainly checked in its advance, if not actually being pushed back. Then the Prussian commanders began to look anxiously to the left for the coming of the Crown Prince. Some Austrian guns near Lipa were seen to be firing towards the Prussian left, and it was hoped they might be directed against the advanced guard of the Second Army, but at three o'clock there were no signs of Prussian columns advancing against Lipa. The Generals became manifestly uneasy, and they drew the infantry out of the battle; cavalry was also formed up, so that it would be available either for the pursuit of the Austrians or for retarding their pursuit, and General von Rheiz himself went off to look for the Second Army. But he soon returned, and brought the intelligence that the Crown Prince was forming his attack on Lipa, and that the guns on the Austrian right had been firing against his troops Then the First Army took heart again. The Sadowa wood was carried, and the battery beyond it was stormed by the Jagers. At half-past 3 the Crown Prince's columns were seen moving across the slope against Lipa, for his artillery had silenced the Austrian guns, and Herwarth was again pressing forward against the Austrian left. In a quarter of an hour the Crown Prince's infantry was engaged at Lipa, and their quick every of musketry rapidly advancing, told that the Austrians were in full retreat.—The First Army pushed forward at once, the artillery limbered up, and galloped up the slope, coming into action on every opportunity to send its shells against the retreating battalions, the infantry, emerging from the woods, formed and pressed at the double. Prince Frederick Charles put himself at the head of his regiment and dashed over the Sadowa bridge and up the road followed by all his light cavalry.

THE AUSTRIAN RETREAT.

On gaining the top of the Lipa slopes the retreating battalions of the Austrians were seen running across a hollow in the ground which lies between Lipa and the village of Stresslitz, which lies about two miles further south. The Prussian artillery halted on the summit of the Lipa hill and fired shells rapidly, which bursted with terrible precision over the heads of the fugitives. The cavalry flew forward in pursuit, but the Prince after leading a short way, had to go to superintend the general movement, for the Austrian batteries had taken post in the Stresslitz ridge, and were firing heavily at the pursuing Prussians. Then the cavalry got out of hand, and by small detachments rushed on the Austrian battalions, but these though retreating fast, were not routed, and in many instances beat off the cavalry, who also suffered much from the Austrian artillery, for the shells burst repeatedly among the squadrons, and killed many men and horses But the Austrian guns were driven off their ridge by the heavier fire of the more numerous Prussian batteries, and then the pursuit was renewed. Some of the retreating Austrians made for the fortress of Koniggratz, others for Pardubitz, and troops were sent in pursuit along both roads.

Large numbers of prisoners were taken, for the pursuit was continued to the Elbe, and it was not until 9 o'clock, that all firing had ceased, but the main body of the army halted about 7.

IMPORTANCE OF THE VICTORY.

The battle of the Sadowa has been a great victory for the Prussian army; the troops fought with the most determined courage, they stood for hours under a terrible fire, for there are supposed to have been nearly 1,500 guns in action, of which 750 were Prussian. The immediate cause of the victory was the Crown Prince's attack on the Austrian left flank, which turned the position, but the attack in front had a great effect on the issue, as neither it had too steadily maintained, the Austrians might have repulsed the attack in flank.

It is the opinion of he Prussian Generals that the Austrian interest was most skilful, and that their artillery was excellently handled.

The number of troops engaged on the Prussian side was about 220,000. The Austrians are supposed to have had almost an equal number. No details have yet been received of the number of killed and wounded, or prisoners.

THE PRUSSIAN NEEDLE-GUN.

The correspondence from the seat of war in Germany abounds with proofs of the efficiency of the Prussian needle-gun. The wounded Austrians brought to Vienna state there is hardly any interruption in the fire of the Prussian infantry. The bullets are continually raining about one's ears like hail-stones during a storm.

The Times, in a leader, says from first to last it is the needle-gun that has apparently carried the day, and the needle-gun is simply a breech-loading rifle of very inefficient quality. In principle as well as in construction it is not to be compared with several breech-loading rifles manufactured by English makers; but inspector as it is, it has proved quite good enough to secure victory for the Prussians in almost every encounter. With these facts before us not a day should be lost in arming our own infantry with breech-loaders of the most available pattern.

The Crown Prince of Prussia, in his report of the events of the 27th ult., says:—"The needle-gun effected considerable slaughter, and caused the failure of the enemy's attacks, which were undertaken with great intrepidity."

The Siecle, referring to the superior arms of the Prussians, says:—We believe, notwithstanding the silence of the German journals, that the Prussian needle-gun, which were already so celebrated, succeed beyond all expectation. The Prussians fire six times a minute; thus, if an advance of four minutes is necessary for making a charge, the Austrian soldier is exposed to twenty-four shots before having a chance of meeting his adversary hand to hand, and should be only pause in his attack for a moment, he is laid low by a bullet immediately. Such is the truth; the Prince of Prussia was therefore right when he said in his proclamation to his soldiers, "Have confidence in the justness of your cause—and in your arms of precision." At present these two ideas, which were formerly so dissimilar, now present no incongruity. The fearful massacre by those fire-arms is, besides, most methodical At the left of the Prussian army, the defile of Nachod was filled up with the Austrian killed. Whole battalions of Tyrolean chasseurs were cut down in complete files. The 27th Regiment of Westphalian riflemen (the best marksmen in the Prussian army) effected a horrible carnage while scarcely suffering themselves.

The Fenian Raid into Canada.

The press of the mother country seems at length to be thoroughly aroused to the wrongs Canadians endured, both from the Fenians and delays. Peacock, with his peccadilloes, is out and spread. The following is from the Glasgow Morning Journal:

'The poor Queen's Own had no supports and most strong to say, the regular and artillery from Chippawa, only reached Fort Erie on Sunday, after the Fenians had evacuated the place and returned by steamer to Buffalo, leaving their dead and wounded and their advance pickets so their fate. What because of the regular troops and Col. Peacock, all this time? If they had come up in time they would, with the artillery, o cered the field of Fenians, and saved the Queen's Own There is in this, on a small scale, the same thing that occurred with our troops in the Crimea during the early part of the war. Whether it be red tape or anything else the fact s that the British troops do not adapt themselves to the circumstances of place and situation as do the French troops and the Americans. This was clearly seen in the Crimea at first and was clearly seen here, in the long time they took to march thirteen miles leaving the Queen's Own to their fate, and allowing three 000 cut-throats of Fenians to escape. It is irritating to think of it, that the 47th and 16th regiments and to parts of the Royal artillery, the finest in the world Armstrong guns in beautiful and perfect order, and worked by disciplined men, should have been kept nearly thirty hours on a thirteen or fourteen miles' march.'

The Rev. James McGregor, of Parsley, Scotland, at the last meeting of the Presbytery, said he would propose the following segnestions:—As to the doctrine of a two-fold purpose of God to save sinners, the one effectual and the other not, held by Amyrald and others, in the 17th century, or the do

THIS MAMMOTH CREATURE,

One of the finest specimens in the collection, is of recent importation, having been purchased from

BATTY'S ROYAL ZOOLOGICAL INSTITUTE,

Expressly for this establishment. Being docile, kind and affectionate in disposition, Herr Lengel determined to so train and educate it that he could

LET IT LOOSE IN THE STREET!

And thus exhibit it in comparison to these fierce and sanguinary brutes, in the den of which he performs such heroic exploits.

THE TAME LION WALKS FROM HIS CAGE AMONG SPECTATORS,

Mounts a Pedestal erected on a splendidly wrought car, and is thus borne in triumph through crowded thoroughfares, to the astonishment and delight of the assembled masses.

DAN CASTELLO,

Will appear in his Motley Attire, give his Humours of the hour, introduce his Magnificent Horse with the "Flowing Mane,"

RUSSIAN CZAR;

His Sagacious Trick Steed, Andy Johnson; the Irresistable Pony, the smallest and smartest in the world, JANUARY, and those Irrepressible Quadrupeds,

"THEM MULES,"

"Artemus Ward," "Brick Pomeroy,"

NEW AND STARTLING SPECIALITY!

Given for the first time in any Exhibition in any Country.

HERR LENGEL,

The most daring artiste who ever handled the monsters of the Forest, Plains and Jungles will enter the den with the WILD LIONS AND LIONESSES!

And give a performance that has created an unparalled excitement throughout the country. The papers and the people have endorsed and proclaimed it to be the GREATEST DISPLAY OF INTREPIDITY!

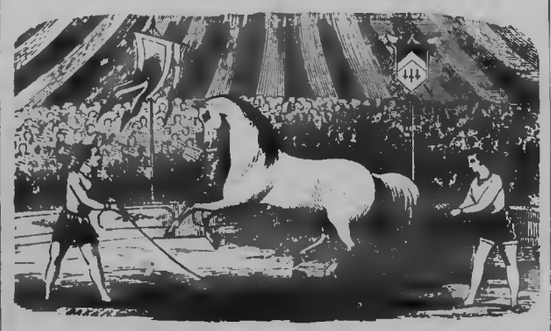
EVER DISPLAYED BY MORTAL BEING.



The Circus Company

Comprises some of the most eminent people in the Equestrian and Gymnastic departments of art, among whom Maille. PALMYRA HOLLOWAY, leading European Equestrian; Mrs. DAN. CASTELLO, Mistress of the Manege; Maille. ELLA LEMOINE, Histrionic Equestrienne; Mr. E. HOLLOWAY, the Lightening Leaper; Messrs. HANNON and POWERS, the daring Calisthenic artists; Mr. E. Poetry.

MATRIMONIAL COMPLACENCY.

Since Grace and I were double,
We've been a goodish couple,
As goodish couples go;
To me ecstatic passion
Our present hearts respond,
But you know 'tis out of fashion
For couples to be fond.

I thought her once angelic,
A fairy she did seem—
There is not now a relic
Of that diviner dream;
Her dress is more than costly,
Her taste in music fine,
She eats—and it is vastly
As other people dine.

Nor can I now her bore—
The worshipped one alone;
A matrimonial Nero
She seems to think me grown;
A brute, should I refuse her
That dear, sweet Cashmere shawl;
Worse than a brute I use her,
If kept in town the Fall.

Cigars are her abhorrence,
She hates the sight of wine,
And no presumption warrants
A friend brought home to dine!
She won't believe 'tis business
That keeps me late at night,
And on the slightest dizziness,
I am condemned as "tight."

But still, despite this trouble—
These little puffs of woe,
We make a goodish couple,
As goodish couples go;
To no ecstatic passion
Our present hearts respond,
But you know 'tis out of fashion
For couples to be fond.

William Howitt's Four Doctors.

I am temperate because I have seen and felt the good policy of it. As a literary man, if I had fallen in with ordinary literary habits, I should not have been sitting here to write about the advantages of temperance. If I had lived as the majority of literary men of the age, as a man about town, and kept the usual late hours, and passed evening after evening in hot crowded rooms, breathing the deadly poison of physical effluvia, gas, and air deprived of its ozone: if I had sat over the bottle at late suppers, foolishly called dinners; and, in short, had 'jollified'—as my literary contemporaries call it, I should have been gone thirty years ago.

As it is, I have seen numbers of literary men myself, dying off like rotten sheep—some of them in their very early youth, few of them becoming old. They have acquired great reputations; for if you take notice, they who collect about the press, and jollify with one another, and cry up one another as prodigies, are the men who become most popular; and 'surely they have their reward.'

They reap much money, and much temporary fame; but at what price do the purchase it? At the cost of bodily as well as mental comfort; at the cost of life itself. For my part, seeing the victims to 'fast life' daily falling around me, I have willingly abandoned the temporary advantages of such a life, and preferred less popularity, less gains, the enjoyment of a sound mind in a sound body, the blessings of a quiet domestic life, and a more restricted but not less enjoyable circle of society.

I am now fast approaching my seventieth year. I cannot, indeed, say that I have reached this period, active vigorous as I am, without the assistance of doctors. I have had the constant attendance of these four famous ones: Temperance, Exercise, Good Air, and Good Hours.

And now a word on work. Those who imagine I only wag a goose quill mistake a little. In that department indeed, I have perhaps done as much work as any man living. Often, in early years, I labored assiduously sixteen hours a day. I never omit walking three or four miles, or more, in all weather. I work hard in my garden, and could tire down a tolerable man at that sort of thing. During my two years' travel in Austria, when about sixty, I walked often, under a burning sun of one hundred and twenty or one hundred and thirty degrees at noon, my twenty miles a day for days and weeks together; worked at digging gold, in great heat, and against young active men, my twelve hours a day, sometimes standing in a brook. I waded through rivers—for neither man nor nature had many bridges—and let my clothes dry upon my back; washed my own linen, and made and baked my own bread before I ate it, slept occasionally under the forest tree; and through it all as hearty as a roach.

And how did I manage all this, not only with ease but with enjoyment? Simply because I avoided spirituous liquors as I would avoid the poison of an asp. The horrors which I saw there from the drinking of spirits were enough to make a man of the least sense sober. The extent to which spirit-drinking was carried may be judged of by the unexampled fact, that one year during my stay, nine hundred thousand pounds were paid for duty on spirits alone, and that for a population of only two hundred and fifty thousand souls. Well, then, I think I have a claim to recommend to my fellow-workmen abstinence from beer, spirits and tobacco. They are all poisoners of the blood; they are all burnt-offerings unto death; they are all destroyers of the bottom of our pocket, and, what is worse destroyers of the peace of families, the constitutions of men, the domestic comfort and virtues of women, the physical stamina and the very life of children. They slay the morals of society, the intellects and the souls of men. As I read daily the police reports and the proceedings of our criminal courts I trace the wide-spread pestilence of spirits, beer and tobacco in almost every outrage and misery. All these influence the passions or becloud the intellect; they originate robbery of masters, and robbery of all kinds. They strip their practicers of health, clothes, morals and sanity: they convert them into madmen and devils.—They fire the brain with frenzy, and arm the hand with bludgeons and knives against their own wives and children. The great bulk of the crimes and calamities of society flow from the tap and the spigot!

By this indulgence—surely the most marvellous of infatuations—and absurd appetite, "set on fire of hell," the people encourage the government to plunder them most cruelly, in the shape of excise duties. To furnish the government with this duty, our working millions abandon every duty of their own. They set up over themselves a most terrible tyranny. They keep open gin-shops at every corner, even on Sabbath evenings, when the book shops and simple refreshment rooms are not allowed to be open.

What flower does a pretty Quakeress resemble?—The primrose.

What flower is esteemed by a gentle man's servant?—The lily of the valet.

What is the flower of a teacher?—Verbena.

What is the flower for the poor?—Any money.

What is the flower for a Chinese woman?—Pick her tea.

What is the flower of a maraine painter?—Art tea.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any Cologne, used to bathe the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for handkerchiefs, &c. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and has obtained a percentage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, each by Dumas Barnes & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

"Jes' so!"—"Exactly!"—Solon Shingle said; they were there "every time." If he felt "seedy" in the morning, he took Plantation Bitters; if he felt weary at night, he took Plantation Bitters; if he lacked appetite, was weak, languid or mentally oppressed, he took Plantation Bitters; and they never failed to set him on his pins square and firm.

Few persons want any better authority; but as some may, just read the following:

" " " " I owe much to you, for I verily believe the Plantation Bitters have saved my life.

REV. W. H. WAGONER, Madrid, N. Y.

" " " " I have been a great sufferer from Dyspepsia, and had to abandon preaching. " " The Plantation Bitters have cured me.

REV. C. A. HILLWOOD, New York City.

" " " " I had lost all appetite—was so weak and emaciated I could hardly walk, and had a perfect dread of society. " " " The Plantation Bitters have set me all right.

JAMES HEIMINWAY, St. Louis, Mo.

" " " " The Plantation Bitters have cured me of a derangement of the Kidneys and Urinary Organs, that distressed me for years. They act like a charm.

C. C. MOORE, 254 Broadway, N. Y.

Mrs. O. M. DEVOE, manager of the Union Home School for Soldiers' Children, says she "has given it to the weak and invalid children under her charge, with the most happy and gratifying results." We have received over a hundred reams of such certificates, but no advertisement is so effective as what people themselves say of a good article. Our fortune and our reputation is at stake. The original quality and high character of these goods will be sustained under every and all circumstances. They have already obtained a sale in every town, village, parish and hamlet among civilized nations. Base imitators try to come as near our name and style as they can, and because a good article cannot be sold as low as a poor one, they find some auxiliary from parties who do not care what they sell. Be on your guard. See our private stamp over the cork.

Over a Million Dollars Saved!

Gentleman:—"I had a negro man worth $1,200 who took cold from a bad hurt in the leg, and was useless for over a year. I had used everything I could hear of without benefit, until I tried the Mexican Mustang Liniment.—It soon effected a permanent cure."

J. J. BOWKING.

Montgomery, Ala., June 17, 1859.

"I take pleasure in recommending the Mexican Mustang Liniment as a valuable and indispensible article for Sprains, Sores, Scratches or Galls on Horses. Our men all say it sets like magic."

J. W. HEWITT,
Foreman for America, Wells, Fargo's and Harnden's Express

"The Sprain of my daughters ankle, occasioned while skating last winter, was entirely cured in one week, after she commenced using your celebrated Mustang Liniment.

ED. PERLY."

Gloucester, Mass., Aug 1, 1865.

It is an admitted fact that the Mexican Mustang Liniment performs more cures in shorter time, on man and beast, than any article ever discovered. Families, livery-men and painters should always have it on hand. Quick and sure it certainly is. All genuine is wrapped in steel-plate engravings, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook Chemist, and the private U. S. stamp of Demas Barnes & Co over the top.

An effort has been made to counterfeit it with a cheap stone plate label. Look closely!

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

It is a most delightful Hair Dressing.
It eradicates scurf and dandruff.
It keeps the hair rich, soft and glossy.
It prevents hair turning gray and falling off
It restores hair upon prematurely bald heads.
This is just what Lyon's Kathairon will do.
It is pretty—it is cheap—durable. It is literally sold by the car-load, and yet its almost increasing, until there is hardly a country store that does not keep it, or a family that does not use it.

E. THOMAS LYON, Chemist, N. Y.

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

Who would not be beautiful? Who would not add to their beauty? What gives that marble purity and distingue appearance we observe upon the stage, and in the city belle? It is no longer a secret. They use Hagan's Magnolia Balm. Its continued use removes tan, freckles, pimples and roughness, from the face and hands, and leaves the complexion smooth, transparent, blooming and ravishing. Unlike many cosmetics it contains no material injurious to the skin. Any Druggists will order it for you, if not on hand, at 5 cts per bottle.

W. E. HAGAN, Troy, N. Y., Chemist.

Helmstreet's Inimitable Hair Coloring is not a dye. All instantaneous dyes are composed of lunar caustic, and more or less destroy the vitality and beauty of the hair. This is the original Hair Coloring, and has been growing in favor over twenty years. It restores gray hair to its original color by gradual absorption, in a most remarkable manner. It is also a beautiful hair dressing. Sold in two sizes—50 cents and $1—by all dealers.

C. HELMSTREET, Chemist.

Saratoga Spring Water, sold by all Druggists.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER—for Indigestion, Nausea, Heart-burn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, Flatulency, &c, where a warming stimulant is required. Its careful preparation and entire purity makes it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cts. per bottle. Ask for "Lyon's" Pure Extract. Take no other.

Dr. Russell's Letters from the Austrian Army.

More Minute Account of the Battle of Sadowa—The Probable Losses—Scenes After the Defeat—Retreating Southward—Present Condition of the Army.

(From the London Times' Special Correspondent.)

BRUNN, Friday, July 6, 1866.

To try and look back on the various events of the last three days is to make an attempt to remember all the proportions and phases of a nightmare. The great battle, the sudden defeat at the very instant of victory, the dreadful retreat, the miraculous absorption of an armed host, vast as the hordes of some Asiatic conqueror in that mortal quagmire in front of Koeniggratz—all that appears like the memories of some sick dream. To be hurried along in a retrograde movement, so rapid that an enemy might term it a rout: to hear that ever muttered phrase, "The Prussians are coming;" for two long days to see soldiers, ever turning their faces over their shoulders, and loading as they "double" along the road; to have to write fragmentary leaves of the narrative by the roadside, by cornfields in hasty halts, in noisy swarming with soldiery, in country inns, where every man is as good as another, and still to have to start at the sound of the bugle or at the oft-recurring "serviette"—all that is nothing. But to think of the spectacle which met one's eyes on the morning of July 3, from the towers of Koniggratz, to recall the reduced lines of those myriads obedient to the smallest word of one small man, to review, as it were, those glorious legions of horse and foot, which seemed to cover the earth as the corn fills the field, and then the turn to the broken, confused, disordered mass of human beings, with and without arms, which I have been travelling through mile after mile, and to endeavour to bring home the fact to one's-self that this is the Austrian army that was—demands a severe effort of reason and a hard subjugation to the evidence of accomplished facts.

Now, that I may speak without reserve but with all the sincere respect due to bravery and misfortune, so largely exemplified in indissoluble union, I must be permitted to express my conviction that if the Austrian General, instead of acting like an ostrich, and thinking no one saw him when he put his head in the sand, had told his army and the Austrian people the truth, and the whole truth, about their position, their duties and their reverses, it would have been better for them, for him and for his country. The shock of this disaster to an army which had been led to believe it was victorious, was tremendous and dislocating, but, above all, it broke to pieces the faith once so solid which that army had in the word and in the fortunes of their General. Although there is much talk of treason on the part of Generals and others, whose only treason was that they accepted posts in the service of their country for which they were not competent, no one can say that by letter or telegraph, did any newspaper correspondent inflict the smallest damage on the army, or in any way damage the plans of its chief. When the Prussians advanced from place to place, they naturally mark the route on the map, and the blackest official night spread all over Austria by the bureau will not hide the fact any more than it will heal the wounded or restore the dead to life. Those poor Bohemians who have had their houses burned over their heads in a land where every family, perhaps, will miss a face never to be seen again, learn of such events as the action at Skalitz and Jicin from the Allgemiene Zeitung, or the French papers, in Prussian despatches; but they know well enough that their chateaux and mansions, their towns and villages, have been occupied by the enemy; and that the army on which they relied for protection has not been able to stem the torrent of the invaders. Where do the long trains of wounded come from? Why are there no Prussian prisoners?—no Prussian guns? Why, our troops were victorious at Skalitz and Eldelsheim, routed the foe at Jicin—and, what, then, is this ghastly array of mutilated, dispirited men in the streets, and why has Benedek gone from Josephstadt to Dubence, and from Dubence to Koniggratz? Vienna we hear is angry and dangerous. Out with the truth at once. Do not let it come from an enemy's lips. Out with the truth, and rely on the devotion and loyalty of a brave and single-hearted people to Emperor and Fatherland. The very night before we quitted Josephstadt the Chief of the Press Bureau, if I may call him and it so, at head-quarters, went round in a very important manner, to request that no letters or telegraphs should be sent from the army, as if letter or telegraph could give the smallest information of use to an enemy which he could not find out for himself long before his news could have come back. So strong is the principle of keeping every one in the dark carried that the Staff know nothing and therefore can throw no intelligence into their actions or the delivery of their orders, and are subject to the grossest delusions. Thus the night when we made the hasty and undignified entry into Koniggratz from Sadowa, and witnessed a most extraordinary rout and panic on the part of the fugitives from Jicin, a staff officer assured me very earnestly that there had been no fight at all, and that the whole of the disorder was caused by the Austrians mistaking the Saxons for the enemy; and he gave the assurance at the very moment that the telegraph was telling all over Europe how the Prussians had beaten Austria and Saxony, and how both had fled, leaving their route covered with guns and baggage to Koniggratz. The truth comes in at the end; and if the Austrians could but imitate the Prussians in the truth of their bulletins, they would render their defeats less depressing, and increase the respect and sympathy all must feel for their ill-fortunes and their valor. The most curious reports are going abroad among the men; how one General betrayed the plans of Benedek, and has been shot; how another went over to the enemy with information just before the battle; how one man has sold one pass, and another has been bribed not to fight. And if the Prussians were but beaten with all this, who could say a word against the system? But the Prussians are victorious. The moral is that the ostrich system will not win battles, or even aid in winning them, if it be the great reliance of a general in the days of printing-presses, railways, and steam and telegraphy.

Here we are at Brunn at last. We now know that the army, which will soon establish its headquarters here, was beaten in repeated actions since the Prussians invaded Bohemia. When Benedek was compelled to abandon his project, or what was supposed to be his project, of invading Silesia, and marching on Berlin, by the news that the Prussians were preparing to enter Bohemia, he might have reasonably hoped to hold the passes which led through Riesengeberge on the north and the mountainous eastern frontier. We know now that he failed. The operations commenced in good earnest on the 27th. On one and the same day (June 28) the Prussians compelled the Austrians to fall back from Nachod on the west, from Trautenau on the north, and from Munchengratz on the west of Josephstadt, and we are now aware that Benedek was subsequently foiled in all his endeavours, either by manœuvring or fighting, to prevent the junction of the armies of the Crown Prince and Prince Frederick Charles, and had only the choice of permitting them to over-run Bohemia, or fighting and beating their combined forces as he abandoned all hope of a counter-demonstration in Silesia, and would not venture to leave Vienna unprotected. What Benedek could not effect against the Prussians when they were divided and he was stronger than each, he could scarcely hope to do when united and stronger than he was. The impetuosity and anger of the Crown Prince of Saxony are assigned as the reason for the disaster at Jicin. Count Clam-Gallas and the Saxons were placed on the left to watch the Prussians in that direction and to prevent their moving round Benedek's flank, but the Austrian General had strict orders not to attack the enemy.—Count Clam-Gallas is popularly believed to have been the author of the misfortune which befell the Austrians at Magenta by disobeying his orders. On the present occasion he gave way to the importunities, it is said, of the Crown Prince or of the King of Saxony, and assaulted the Prussians with magal want of success. In fact, the magnificent army which fought so well for her Home Hansburg was beaten in detail and en masse before it received the blow two days ago which shattered it into the fragments I see around me. There are few armies can stand reverses and retreats when they hoped for victories and advances. Least of all is the Austrian army one of these; for different nationalities cause suspicions and reflections injurious to cohesion in the hour of evil fortune.

I shall renew in more detail than I could manage while on the march the narrative of the retreat, and some matters relating to the battle itself. The names of the villages in my previous letter were rendered phonetically as well as I could gather the sounds from the pronunciation of the Bohemian who had charge of the tower at Koniggratz. There are no two maps of the country alike as far as I have seen, and the spelling of the places varies where the maps do agree as to their existence. What I have called the Prague road is, more properly speaking, the Horitz and Jicin road, though it issues from Koniggratz under the Prager Thor, and identical with the main road to Prague for some distance outside the city. When Benedek moved his headquarters from Josephstadt to Dubonce, on the road to Milletin, and concentrated the army on the hills near the course of the railway I have no doubt he intended to strike a blow at the enemy on his right, and to throw them back toward Skalitz, while Clam-Gallas and the Saxons watched his left. This movement to Dubence was effected on the 30th June, as I have already described it, and as the headquarters' fourgeons and equipages to march on Milletin originally, it is probable Benedek intended, had he been successful, to have detached one portion of his army or procure the Crown Prince to the northeast (and he massed his cavalry toward Dub nec for the purpose to a great extent, as I mentioned, being their ignorant of his object, as perhaps I am now,) while he threw himself against the other army under Prince Frederick Charles, and with the Saxons and the First Corps sought to drive them back toward the northwest. But this movement was anticipated, or at all events frustrated, by the utter defeat of the Saxons and the First army Corps at Jicin and he was obliged in all haste to fall back on Koniggratz, and to await before that place with his whole army the attack of the united armies of the King of Prussia, with what result I need not say. The head-quarters left Dubenec on the 1st of July, and on the next day the concentration of the army was complete; but, vast as were its numbers, the Austrians say the enemy very much outnumbered them, and affirm that the Prussians had at least 60,000 more men than they could muster. They had the guard, which is estimated at 45,000; the first, (De Bonin,) the second, (Schmidt,) the fourth, (Schlaek) the fifth, Steinmetz, the sixth. (Mutius,) and the seventh army corps, each over 90,000 strong at least, making all deductions, making, with cavalry and artillery, a total of 245,000. The Austrians had the Saxons, 18,000 strong, it is said; the first, (Clam-Gallas,) the second, (Thun,) the fourth, (Ferdinand) the sixth, (Bamming,) the seventh, the eighth, (Von Weber) and the ninth and tenth corps reduced in strength to less than 25,000 men each, which, with Saxons, horse and artillery, would make Benedek's force under 200,000 men. In artillery the Prussians were also superior—at least in the number of guns. Such being the case, it is rather singular that no steps were taken by the Austrians to throw up a few fieldworks, or to intrench the weak parts of their line. Their generals do not seem to know that their is a very useful military implement called a spade.—To the utter amazement of the Prussians they were permitted to pass through the defiles of Nachod without a struggle, and at last they actually became afraid that Benedek had laid some deep plan for their utter destruction, so easily did they advance through the mountain passes, which could have been held with comparative ease by a few men behind earth-works against thousand of assailants. It is impossible now to verify the estimates, and still less to fit within one's power to form an idea of the Austrian losses, but it may be true that 80,000 men were killed, wounded, taken prisoners or drowned, and that 150 guns were taken, abandoned, or thrown into the river on the retreat.

As I hurried out of Koniggratz towards evening, the garrison had closed the gates towards the enemy, and only left an exit for the train towards Hohenmauth. The artillerymen were all at their guns, and it was not long ere the reports of the heavy ordnance at the bastion boomed through the air above the reports of the furious cannonade, which was only interrupted by night, as the Prussians pressed on the retreating Austrian, and were held in check by the cavalry and the devoted artillery. The Austrians were compelled to cross the rivers by the pontoon bridges, at which horse, foot and guns and trains crowded pell-mell together, often under a pelting, pitiless shower of shell and shrapnel, and even of musketry. There are dreadful stories coming out of great unknown horrors which took place that night—how pontoons, laden with hundreds, were swept down the river and overturned with their shrieking, helpless cargoes, weighted with great-coats and arms and cartridges, and sinking like stones to form a pavement of dead to the bottom of the sullen stream; how artillery and horsemen crashed down upon and through the struggling infantry, and jammed them into the narrow roads and hustled them over the bridges into the pitiless waters; how men wading in their terror were suddenly sucked down in the treacherous holes in marshy inundations, or were swept away in vain attempts to swim across to safety. But for the timely warning sent up to the tower, I might have had the doubtful excitement of forming involuntarily one of the garrison of Koniggratz, or of getting into the great crush which took place behind us, and which, judging from what one actually experienced, must have been anything but agreeable. For the first time I caught sight in this retreat of the rear of this army and of its camp followers, and it is no disparagement to the worthy gentlemen to say that no one would like to meet one of them in a lonesome road on a dark night unless he had his revolver ready, or was secure in rags and poverty. The trains of waggons, the herds of cattle, the multitude of horses, filling the road and the fields near it, were marvellous to behold. Men of all arms came pouring in from the right, and once came in so swiftly and in such panic that the officer commanding the Guard gave orders to his men to look out for cavalry, and so they trotted along, looking as they ran with their eyes right. Some of the fugitives reported that the left wing had abandoned all its artillery, and waded through inundations; and it is maintained on all sides that the left was turned before the right, although as far as I could see, the right was turned at least as soon.

My view of the extreme left was obstructed by some woods, but I still think the Prussians who got into Klum came from the right instead of the left, and that the smoke and confusion below the slope were so great as to prevent even the Generals knowing what occured. Holie was crammed with frightend inhabitants, peasantry, waggons, soldiers who looked with anxious faces toward Koniggratz and watched the flames which reddened the sky from the burning villages, and the flickering flashes of the cannon through the gathering and darkening gloom of evening. The rays of the setting sun broke through the clouds of evening and pierced the screen of crimson and gold as it eager to view the scene, paling the fires which issued but too effectually from the jaws of the hungry cannon, and and lighting up the steeples and towers of Koniggratz with all its glories. What a sight! How many thousands were there who gazed on that Summer's sunset for the last time, and passed out of their agony in the gloom of a cruel night that still was merciful enough to spread its mantle over their sufferings; To us who fled these sights were spared. It is the sad privilege of the conquered to stand among the wounded and the dead. Was it pity which stayed the hand of the purseer? Was it that he had won his field so dearly that he cared not to follow, and could not contest a retreat into a debacle? A slight shove would have done it all. It was not till our escort reached Hohenmauth at 3 30 next morning that all apprehension of a swift pursuit passed away; and, although there were guns in hundreds, and cavalry in thousands, and infantry by tens of thousands on the road by this time, I scarcely think they were in a state to present a formidable front to an enterprising enemy. However, the word went forth that all fear of such a disaster was now over. Gen. Benedek had sent in Gen. Gablenz to the Prussians the evening or night before to ask for a suspension of hostilities, and the enemy had granted it—so it was said. If so it was a confession of the most utter overthrow, and the Prussians will be justified in saying they spread the remnants of the Austrian army, but I have yet my doubts as to the fact, or, at all events, as to the accuracy of the form in which it is conveyed.

At Hohenmauth there was a sad meeting with some of my acquaintances on the staff. They came in, one by one, with jaded horses, drooping heads, and sat silently at the low-browed, dingy cabret. Now and then one broke the silence by an exclamation of pain or grief, and as some new comer came in, and asked to the list of friends lost or slain, or wounded, the fresh sorrow found vent in low murmurs. But the officers bore their defeat like gentlemen. They mourned for their men, for their friends, for their country—not for themselves. The bettalmaster came round, and a little piece of printed parchment entitled me to claim shelter at Carle 48 in the public square. There I found room to rest in and a bed to lie upon and never was rest more grateful. I was awakened by the same kind of gushing sound I had heard yesterday morning and thought it was rain again, but the sun shone in through the windows, and, looking out, I saw it was from an immense multitude, dusty, bloody, footsore, who pressed through the street and surged about amid the trains of artillery, baggage, caissons and waggons of all kinds. Benedek and the rest of his staff now arrived from Holie, and with them your military correspondent, who had been with them throughout the action, and who was glad indeed to take some repose after his fatigue and his dangers. A little while longer and we were summoned to move on again. It was now 2 o'clock, and what was left of the Austrian army was passing through Hohenmauth, or lying about four miles north and south of it. The men of different regiments marched together without order—guns of different calibres were mixed up, and cavalry, infantry and artillery were in a great mosaic, wedged along the road for nine miles to Leitomischl, but things were getting better as the day wore on. The soldiers began gradually to pick up tidings of their battalions, working from army corps to divisions, and brigade to regiments, and by the time we entered Leitomischl the influences of discipline began to exhibit themselves, though in one sense they had never ceased to exist, and no instance of plunder or violence along the road, in villages or in towns, came under my notice. I saw the poor Croat soldiers bargaining with the peasant girls by the roadside for cherries, cheese, bread, cakes or whatever else they brought to sell, and counting out their coppers or bits of paper from their scant purses as if they were making purchases in Vienna itself. Leitomitchl, at which we arrived in the evening, was, of course, crowded, but we managed to get a double-bedded room in an inn, and enjoy our first halt. Post there was none, the telegraph was closed, and all means of sending off letters were cut off, and so we resolved to make an effort to get on to Zwittau, the nearest railway station, whence trains were running, as we heard; but it was not possible to obtain permission, and without it there would be no use in trying to get along the road, especially at night. Next morning we were up early, and still there was the same scene in the streets—soldiers, soldier's horses, and guns, pouring in one mighty stream southwards. There was one of the imperial carriages drawn up at the door of the little Hostenie, and looking out I saw Count Mensdorff de Pauilly walking up and down before the door with the air of a thoughtful, anxious man. He was in the undress uniform of a general officer, and, as the soldiers, who did not know who he was, saluted him, he stopped and asked them questions, relieved their wants by some trifling gift, and continued his sad promenade. It was reported he had come down as one of a military commission to enquire into the cause of the disaster.—At all events, he could judge for himself of the state of the army. Rumors then went forth That Benedek had resigned. For him there is still but one feeling—in his misfortunes the attachment of his officers and the devotion of his men are, if possible, greater than before. Count Clam-Gallas, who is not quite so much surrounded by popular affections in the army, is, it is said, under arrest; so is Count Henchstein, Chief of the staff; and the same authority assigns a similar fate to other generals of high position. Courts-martial, courts of enquiry, and all the apparatus that follow military disaster are to be set to work; and meantime it is above all things needful to have some one to organize the army once more, and to get it into heart. Count Mensdorff appeared to think the cause of the defeat was a panic which seized on the men at the instant of victory. It was nearly noon before I succeeded in getting a pass to Zwittau, and all along the road for ten or twelve miles were scattered the masses of the great host broken to pieces before Josephstadt. The men are coming rapidly under their standards, and the country side for miles in from the road is full of them. They may be seen coming down the sloping hills, through the cornfields, down by paths, their arms glancing in the sun, singly and in groups, Uhlans, dragoons, and foot and gunners, each with his story of escape and adventure.

It was sad to part with the few friends one had made in the short time we had met but with hopes of meeting soon and more happily we parted. A drive of some two hours through a lovely country teeming still with soldiers, brought us to Zwittau, but here there was no good news. All the carriages, except those taken up for the conveyance of the wounded, had been sent down south to escape the enemy, and the last train and the last of the engines were now panting to be off. The railway officials could do nothing, and with tired horses it was not possible to get on to Brunn, eight German miles, that night. But then, in the nick of time, Professor Dumreicher, the great Vienna surgeon, bore in sight, and, what was more, was in a dilemma from which we could help him. He has organized, a great medical staff for sick and wonded, and he was anxious to go from Zwittau to Leitomischl to consult with the authorities, but he had no carriage, could get none, and there was no way of getting by rail. There was his train of doctors, mates and surgeons, and carriages full of wonded, then bound for Brunn and Vienna. Dr. Dumreicher then procured us places in a third-class carriage in exchange for the loan of a carriage and horses; but if we had known what was about to take place it would have been far better to have stuck to the road, though no post-horses were to be had along its course. To make my story short, I may simply say that no great were the obstructions caused by the congregation of rolling stock on the single line to Brunn, and by the trains of wounded men, that the journey by rail from Zwittau to that place, which is under 40 miles, took no less than from 6 p. m. yesterday till 12 o'clock this day; that no food could be got at the stations, and that, to make matters worse, every moment's delay in getting to the post, was adding to the fever caused by irritation and the dejection of retreat, and the excitement of such an awful battle and the scenes that followed it.

VIENNA, Saturday, July 7, 1866.

As there was one, the only, train leaving Brunn at three o'clock yesterday, I came on by it and arrived here at midnight. The terminus presented a most painful scene. It was thronged with weeping women, agonised parents, and relatives and friends awaiting the arrival of the wounded, and the expression of their faces as they ran looking into the carriages was agonising.—Then when some dear object was recognised with head bound up in discoloured bandages, or was lifted up without a leg or arm, there came a wail of anguish, and each little group surrounded its own and bore him away. Litters and straw beds and couches lined the walls of the station. "Have you had many wounds to-day?" "Many," exclaimed the porter, "why, all Vienna will be unable to hold them soon. There were more than a thousand came in this afternoon, and that's nothing. Vienna though her streets is an early city, but as I drove along there were lights in many a window late as it was, and if one could have looked within he would have no doubt beheld scenes almost as dreadful as those of the battle, and have seen where the soldier saved from the hasty grave on the field of honour was passing away amid breaking hearts that would not be consoled by reflecting that he had died for his country, and that their care and affection had smoothed his pillow and deprived death of his army will be at Olmutz, not at Brunn, and they will be, in all probability, established at that place to-morrow.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 11, 1866.

Gen. Benedek has now under his orders at least 150,000 men, not including his cavalry and artillery. Immediately after the fatal 3rd of July it may be doubted whether the gallant but unfortunate leader of the Austrian army could have mustered more than half the number; but the men, spread over a wide extent of country, have rallied to their colours, and a force, to which large increase is daily given by volunteer drafts, and regiments from other quarters, is now assembled to try conclusions with their formidable opponents, if all attempts to effect a peaceful solution of the great quarrel prove unsuccessful. The head-quarters are at Olmutz, where I hope to see them this evening. Gen. Von Benedek is in chief command, but great changes are spoken of in this staff, and in the commanders of the corps d'armee, of whom Ramming and Gablenz are alone in high favour. With Count Mensdorff as War Minister, a more direct and able administration of military affairs may be looked for, as no one can be more devoted, strenuous and honest in his labours for the good of the army. There is nothing spoken of but the late great battle, and too many proofs of its terrible consequences are visible on all sides to permit the calamity to occupy a secondary place among the important events which crowd upon us. It is a very extraordinary circumstance that the Austrians, as far as I can judge, believe their left wing only was turned. Of the exact nature of the position in which their left was placed at the close of the engagement I cannot speak, because the woods and villages, as well as the rising grounds toward Nechanitz, prevented my having as clear a view in that direction as I had of the right. But I am quite certain of this—that before I left the tower the Austrian right wing had fallen back toward Koniggratz, and was involved with the reserves in very considerable confusion; that the Prussians, in solid masses, were advancing all along the ridges and over the cornfields from the right; that their artillery had opened a cross-fire on the Austrian batteries from several points; that their battalions were deploying on the ridge near the big tree toward Klum, but below it, and not far from the road, were in square firing on two fronts, as if to check cavalry from above, and that Prussians were firing at them from the slopes above and from the right at the same time, and that the Prussians had certainly got us between them and their centre in advance of Klum. These things were patent to my eyes. Now, if I were asked to account for the presence of the Prussians in Klum itself, I would say that they came from the right and not from the left, and that they got in by the hollow between the first and second line of elevated ground or ridges from the direction of the big tree. Quite sure am I that some half hour before, a line of Prussian skirmishers with dense support had pushed their way in that direction, and that the fire of their skirmishers was so rapid and well sustained that it looked like the heavy, rolling volleys of battalions engaged in heavy file firing. It is true that Prussian infantry also appeared on the left some time afterward, and that they occupied a wood from which they kept up a rolling fire of musketry on the artillery and infantry on the left of Klum; but if Klum were the centre of the position of the Austrians, I would say decidedly that the Austrian right had been pushed back further than their left, and was more in a condition to be turned, and that it was crumbling up under the advance of the Prussians and under their fire. That the battle was lost when I left the tower, and when the state of things was as I tried to describe in my letter written during our retreat I cannot doubt, because the piece of paper which an officer delivered to me at the time, and which I did not immediately attend to, was in these words:—"Come down at once. The headquarters are leaving; some gone. We are right to start at once" And when I was going under the Marieneher Thor the road was already blocked up, and Benedek had, I believe, left the field.—Probably your military correspondent with the Prussian army will clear up the point. There can be no question but that a couple of hours before the time I speak of the Austrians had steadily driven the whole of the Prussian right and centre back a considerable way and were still gaining on them. The first decided retrograde movement of a permanent character which I perceived on the part of the Austrians, was of a later period, and it was on the right, and not on the left, and still the action was in such a state that Benedek was preparing to order an advance of all his disposable troops, and of his cavalry, to complete the success and turn it to victory. Why Klum was not fiercely attacked again and again, nay, why it was not taken, I cannot understand. The Prussians there ought to have been caught between two fires, the flanks of the left and right of the Austrians, and had the centre behind them, and they had the reserves below and before them if the Austrian accounts are correct. It would not be possible for any large body of the enemy to get unperceived into such a position, no matter how thick the smoke, and a small body ought to have been at once driven out and destroyed by the immense masses of Austrians close at hand. The whole affair is a mystery. It is covered with smoke and fog, and how could the Prussians see to creep into Blum if the Austrians could not see them creeping there? The only explanation is, that there was a great gap left, as there seemed to me to be, between the centre and the right, and the Prussians, pushing along from the big tree in a fold of ground, got in without opposition under the smoke of the burning village, and were soon reinforced. There is a story of an officer seeing them on their way, who wished to report it to some staff dignitary, but in vain, as he was rebuked by an aide-de-camp for his unseemly intrusion. Some day a sifting of evidence among the survivors will enable the historian to decide how the Prussians got into Klum, and there may even be some reason assigned for their not having been driven out of Klum when they got in there, but I fear these reasons cannot be creditable.—To my mind, and let it remembered I have only my eyes to assist me, and have heard little or nothing—the Austrian soldier fought under a physical disadvantage all day. The Prussians were lightly equipped. The prisoners I saw had only their tunics and flat caps, although I saw through the glass some battalions with helmets.—They were in capital fighting trim. The Austrians fought in their long flapping great coat, saturated with rain. They had no heavy knapsacks, canteens, tins, breadbags, and all sorts of impedimenta. Although the Austrian soldier will face any enemy, and die with his face to him, I must say the needle-gun has given him an idea that the Prussians are far better armed, and is therefore superior in the field—in other words, his morale has suffered in the late fights. There are, it is said, 45,000 needle-guns in the Austrian arsenals, but the Prussians over that the needle-gun itself is nothing without the ammunition and that the preparation of powder used to explode the cartridge is a secret known only to themselves, for that will keep good any length of time, whereas ordinary fulminating compounds rapidly lose their strength under the influence of time and moisture. That may or may not be true, but it is certain that the fire of this weapon is terrible in its swiftness. In the assault against Klum all the leading officers and men fell as they pushed up the hill. I have been told that a cavalry regiment breaking into a charge at the distance of 600 yards had been so pelted with the hail of these bullets that more than one-third of every squad on in front, horses and men were down before they could deliver a sabrecut; that the second line, tumbling about over the men and horses of the first squadron, were similarly smitten with annihilating fire, and that when the regiment withdrew on the flanks in disorder, the plain over which they had advanced was piled with their corpses.—Gen. Gablenz arrived in Vienna last night, and it is thought by some that he ought to succeed Feldzeugmeister von Benedek, but it is only due to the latter to state that officers and men still cling to him with passionate devotion, and that they still believe in his "to-morrow." "Not yet, my children; wait till to-morrow!" were the words he addressed to his cheering troops as they were advancing to what they thought an assured victory on the afternoon of the 3rd of July. And they will wait still, and trust on, and die, if needs be, though the worst use to be made of a soldier is to kill him uselessly. There is an irresistable sympathy between the soldier and Benedek, and some men would sooner be beaten under those they love than they will under those they hate. So they say it is all the needle-gun that has done it.

At Olmutz there can be no doubt that Feldzeugmeister von Benedek is in a good position, though he cannot save Bohemia—nay, more, it is very doubtful whether he can save Brunn, in Moravia, the Austrian Manchester and people there are who think Vienna is already gone, or that it will go if the Prussians venture to disregard the peremptory order to "halt" which was from Paris. The Prussians have already shown at Iglau, on the Moravian frontier; but their advance to Vienna, with an army still powerful and numerous in the flank and rear, and with three fortresses such as Theresienstadt, Koniggratz, and Josephstadt on their flanks, would be hazardous as a military measure, without reference to political complications. The line of road to Brunn passes through defiles worked out by the river, and present singular advantages to a defensive force, but according to all present indications, the Prussians may have the place if they wish. The garrison of Vienna is being quietly strengthened and the lines at the other side of the Danube are not of a character to be despised by any enemy. We have to learn yet what the Prussians intend doing at Josephstadt and Koniggratz. Although neither Sebastopool, each is capable of standing a siege and it is not to be walked over or passed by with impunity. The Prussians must have suffered very much in the last battle; a heavier or better direct artillery fire than the Austrians maintained for eight hours could not be adduced from the records of any battle, and it is believed here their losses were at least equal to those of the Austrians though I am disposed to believe the headlong courage of many of the regiments of the Kaiser cost them dear indeed. As yet there are no date to go upon concerning the casualities at Koniggratz but the Wiener Zeitung of to-day gives a list of officers killed in the affair at Skalitz on the 28th of June, from which the severity of the encounter may be estimated. There were engaged on the day the Fifth and Twenty-forth battalions of Jagers, and the Fifteenth Twenty-first, Thirty second and Seventy-seventh regiments of infantry. The first had three officers killed and we may judge they had at least nine wounded. The Second had one killed and wounded in the same proportion, the Nineteenth had five Captains, four over Lieutenants, seven Lieutenants killed, and probably forty-eight officers wounded; the Twenty-first had four officers killed; the Thirty-second had seven officers killed; the Seventy-seventh had four Captains, five over Lieutenants, and eleven Lieutenants killed, and, if the usual proportion holds, sixty officers wounded. In the fight at Wysokow and Pudol, the Cuirassier regiment, No. 4, (Kaiser Ferdinand,) had Captain Karl von Klenck, Captain Patrick John Murray, Lieutenant Mitter von Pitta badly wounded, in addition to the killed, and so on the sad list runs, though it does not appear that the Eighteenth Jager battalion was destroyed as reported by the Prussians in the night fight at Pudol on the 26th of June.

Bleeding at every pore, stricken to her knees, Austria still holds her sword pointed to the enemy, and gages on the threatening front of his advance with a heroic resolve to die with honour. The appeal of the Emperor to his people will bring forth hecatombs of thousands of recruits. All Hungary, we are told, is rising, and will give many a willing recruit to legions which are preparing to fight for the Emperor.

With reference to a report drawn up by Gen. La Marmora respecting the battle of Custozza, in which it appears to be stated that the Fifth, Seventh and Ninth Corps of the Austrian army were engaged there, permit me to state that not one of these corps was present at Custozza, and for the very good reason that they were each and all with the Northern army on the date of the battle.

Testing the Atlantic Cable.

The Times correspondent who accompanies the Atlantic Telegraph expedition says that not a day has passed since the fracture of last year's cable that its insulation has been almost hourly tested at the Irish end. These tests shows its condition up to the broken end, 1,260 miles from shore, to be absolutely perfect. "There is always a certain amount of resistance to an electric current entering a cable, which is called retardation, and is measured by millions of units. A submarine wire of a certain length can therefore always be measured off, so it were, and its insulating and conductive powers ascertained to within a mile of fault by the time the current takes in entering the wire. These tests, as we have said, have been carried on hourly with last year's cable, and the result as to millions of units has corresponded day by day in the most remarkable manner. Of course both its 'conductivity' and resistance have varied as earth currents arose or magnetic storms prevailed, but nine times out of ten the resistance test has been the same, even to a millionth unit, day after day, and these tests are identical with those which would be obtained from a perfect submarine rope 1,260 miles long. The readings of the barometer at the station also afford the most curious data, which until now have been almost entirely overlooked in electrical science as connected with the submarine cables. It is found that exactly in proportion as the barometer rose the resistance of the current increased, and vice versa. In plain terms, a low barometer meant a good cable, and a high barometer a bad one. Another curious circumstance which has been noticed, but never carefully recorded till now, is that between 12 and 2 in the day, and only at those hours, the cable is always at its worst."

QUEEN VICTORIA'S TROUBLES.

The Quebec Gazette says:—Much has been said of late about the Queen, and strong remarks have been made upon her absence from England at this serious crisis of home and foreign politics. It should, however, be remembered that just now her Majesty has very much to harass her. In this miserable German war she has near relations fighting against each other. On the one side is her brother-in-law, the Duke of Saxe Coburg-Gotha, and a son in-law, the Prince of Prussia. On the other is another son-in-law, Prince Louis of Hesse, and her cousin, the King of Hanover, while her new cousin, Prince Teck, has been summoned to the war before his honeymoon is half spent. To make the situation still more melancholy, her eldest daughter has just lost a child, while that daughter's husband is allowed no time for mourning, but has to take the field; and her second daughter, whose husband is on the other side, has been compelled to send home her children to England for safety, while she herself is about to be confined. Add to this the want of friendliness that exists between the Prince of Wales and his intended brother-in-law, rival of the Princess of Wales's father, and we have a most melancholy complication, such as may well make the Queen feel the loss of a counsellor who could have best advised her.

THE BUCKINGHAM MURDER.—The Ottawa Citizen reports the following verdict of the Coroner's in the case of the Buckingham murder:—the inquest on the body of the young girl, found drowned here on the 25th ult., closed on Monday afternoon. The following is a copy of the verdict of the coroner's jury, unanimously concurred in by the twenty-two composing it:—"The body on whom this inquest has been holden is that of Agle Marin, sisters of the Rev. Jeremie Babin; that the deceased came to a violent death maliciously and feloniously by drowning in the River des Livres, near the Buckingham Mills, between the two falls, on or about the 12th day of April last; that her brother, the Rev. Jeremie Babin, was the cause of her death, and that a person called by him Moise Ledoux, is an accessory before the fact."

ANOTHER CIVIL WAR.—Fears are entertained by many American citizens that another civil war is impending in the United States. Resolutions with a view of such an event, and for the distribution of arms among the states, have passed the Federal House of Representatives. It is supposed the struggle will be between the President's party, the Democrats, and the Southerners on the one side and the Radical Republicans on the other. We gather this from a letter written by Mr. Raymond, Editor of the New York Times, and member of Congress. The state of political matters in the United States is feverish and unhealthy.—Ottawa Citizen.

NO LEGISLATIVE ELECTION.—We understand that in view of the early accomplishment of the Confederation Scheme and the adoption of the new constitutions, there will be no election for members of the Legislative Council the coming fall. It is the intention of the Government to introduce a bill, to suspend the law requiring the issue of writs for the election, so that the present members of the Legislative Council, whose term is about to expire, will hold over until the Confederation Scheme shall be adopted and put in operation.—Ottawa Citizen.

It is said that the Archbishops and Bishops in England have given their assent to the establishment of a new class of ministrants in the Church of England. They are to be called "Readers," and will be entitled to perform all the duties hitherto belonging to the clergy alone in outlying districts of large parishes, mission churches being provided for them. They are to wear surplices, but not stoles, and are not to be designated "Reverend."

The tariff of the Atlantic telegraph, which is now fully open for public business, is a pound a word, including signature and address.

A fashionable party is now called a 'daughter-cultural show.'

THE ATLANTIC CABLE.

This great undertaking is at length accomplished—the Atlantic Cable is successfully laid. The two Hemispheres, once requiring months for communication, now only require minutes. This is certainly the great work of the century, fertile of great events as has been the past years of it. Well may it be called the glory of the age, and of the nations that planned and executed it. When we consider the immense capital wasted in the first and second cables, and the amount spent in completing the third, the hopes, fears, patience and energy of the promoters, and the result of the enterprise in bringing together those kindred nations—let us hope by an indissoluble link of amity and good will—do not those men who have brought it to a successful termination deserve the praises of this and future generations.

There is another feature in this great work. It is the work of those two great nations that have given shape to all that is progressive in modern times, and extend civilization wherever they extend their commerce and influence, and also nourish those principles of liberty, justice, truth and progress that are calculated to civilize and render mankind happy. It is the work too of the two great Protestant nations of the age. Southern and Central Europe is crying under the political storms that are agitating those seats of superstition and bigotry, those centres of ignorance and cruelty. The people are longing to be free, and this death struggle will shatter to the foundations thrones and dominions that have barred progress and forbid the liberty of thought and action. They are crumbling to ruin; the mighty are falling; the tyrants tremble, and nations reel to and fro; but they are the nations that enslave men, that will not allow thought to expand and genius to proceed to action. Their reward is destruction, and just as the smoke of their ruin ascends, the English and American people are growing stronger, nobler and more glorious; pushing forward commerce, liberty, enterprise, and the concomitants, freedom of thought and action, until now they can converse with each other, as it were face to face, at the distance of 2,000 miles from each other. This is a work of which both nations may be proud, and a work we trust that may draw them closer together in the future. Why should the one be jealous of the other? Why should our American neighbours be so jealous of the parent whence they sprung, and whose spirit, bravery, enterprise and energy they so manifestly inherit? And why should Britain be jealous of her daughter? Nay, well may she be proud of such an offspring, and long may they be able to unite in extending the blessing of civilization, the gospel and liberty; and the blessing and advantages of science among their own people, and also to the ends of the earth.

WAR NEWS.

Since our last we have received intelligence that after a second struggle the two great powers concerned have agreed to an armistice and that terms of peace are being agreed to. This, however, did not take place until Italy received another severe repulse, losing some of her gunboats, and in some degree affecting the morale of the Italian army, as two successive defeats must have a depressing influence on the army of Victor Immanuel. His great ally in the North is, so far, victorious and may be able to ensure all that Italy asked. Various rumors are afloat of France ceding Venetia for Sardinia and of sending the Pope there for a season. It is fully believed that the old man's influence is over in Italy and that something must be done to afford him an asylum from his own people.

So far Prussia, Austria and Italy have been allowed to have things their own way; no outside influence has been brought to bear either ways. We hardly believe, however, that peace is yet sure, there may be a truce but the end is not yet. They may quarrel over the settlement, let us wait and see.

SPECIAL MEETING.

The County Council will meet in special session this day at 12 o'clock. The business will be at once proceeded with, and finished, it is believed, by Saturday, so as to have a short session. The only business of importance is to provide the money the Council intends voting for the new Drill Shed about to be erected. There may be other business but not of much importance. No special meeting would have been but for the desire on the part of the Warden and other members of the Council to proceed with the shed at once. The shed we expect will be one worthy the Town, and will be useful for other purposes than drilling. Heretofore we never had a proper place for agricultural exhibitions, but this shed which will be about 200 by 85 will be a very suitable place for such exhibitions. This year the exhibition will be at Lakefield from the fact that the necessary accommodations can be more easily obtained there than here, but we trust this will not be so again, and that hereafter the Count, Show will not need to be held out of Town. The building will also be useful for large meetings and other purposes, a thing which was much needed.

A Disgraceful Scene in the Library of Parliament.

M. Gerin Lajoie, Editor of Le Canadien, Ottawa, seized the M. E. Dorion, a member of the House, striking him on the face and head several times. After some exposition of parliamentary usage in such cases, the speaker issued a warrant for the arrest of the pugilistic M. Lajoie, when he was arrested in the Reporters gallery. The scene of the altercation is as follows:—

Mr. Holton having arisen to a question of privilege, informed the House that Mr. Eric Dorion had been assaulted in the Library by M. Gerin Lajoie.

Mr. J. H. Cameron and Mr. Morris cited cases showing that the statement of the member assaulted was first taken and on it the Speaker's warrant was issued.

M. Eric Dorion then made the following statement:—"I had occasion, Mr. Speaker, to go to the library about half past ten. I was taking out some books when I was called on by M. Gerin Lajoie, editor of Le Canada published in Ottawa. He requested me to take the seat he had just occupied in the corner of the library. I refused to take the seat, but sat down on the stool next to it. He commenced a series of questions about an article which appeared in the Defricheur, of which I am proprietor. After a few words of explanation in regard to that article, he became very much excited and used very abusive language towards me. I forget exactly the words, but they were very impertinent and insulting. As I did not wish to carry on a conversation of that description I rose from my seat to leave him alone, whereupon he began an attack upon me by striking me in the face with his closed hand. I protected myself as well as I could. He struck me several times with his closed hand on the face and head until some of the parties in the room took him away to prevent him from doing me any further injury." The statement was received amidst profound silence and was taken down by the clerk.

"SOLD, SOLD AGAIN."

Our readers will remember those oft repeated words of "Cheap John," when he carried on business in this town, and he generally added "and the money paid."—We have no doubt but these addenda may be applied to the Review—"Sold sold again and the money paid;" but unfortunately sold to corruption and to do the work of corruptionists. Lately the Review's virtual organs have become so discoloured that everything is Brown, and if abuse and misrepresentation would make the paper on which they are written brown, the Review would appear on a colored sheet. Happily those things only effect the propagator thereof. We have on more than one occasion exposed the predilections of the Editor of the Review for what is not true. Not more than a few weeks since we convicted him of asserting a manifest untruth; not satisfied, however, he again awaits us in his favorite terms—"tissue of misrepresentation and untruth." We prefer his slander to his praise; as journalists we do not desire to be found in bad company, and in consequence we steer clear of Reviewism, and we hope to continue apart.

Before Parliament assembled, the Press on both sides of politics told us that the great work of the session—which was to be a very short one—would be Confederation; that the House would meet, pass the supplies, name a delegation to proceed to England, and at once try and perfect the Confederation. This we know has not taken place, and already nearly two months are spent in discussing Mr. Galt's tariff, which should have been left for the Confederate Parliament to discuss and settle, as that body will have to do it at any rate.

Our contemporary with his usual honesty, and slander of Mr. Brown, tells us that "If the Canadian delegates are not now ready to proceed to England to conclude the final arrangements for Confederation, it is solely owing to the unprincipled plot concocted by Messrs. Holton and Brown, to embarrass and defeat the Government." There never was a greater falsehood uttered than this one. The universal reason given by government organs—even by the Leader, a well informed journal—for the delay, is the absurd one that the Derby government would not have time to attend to such matters just now, and it has been left to the Editor of the Review to invent the false and absurd cry of Mr. Brown's opposition, (The Hamilton Spectator says "it is the present state of Imperial politics,) as Mr. Brown has all along urged the government to proceed with Confederation, and allow the local parliament to settle local matters, and this we defy our contemporary to contradict unless by asserting falsehoods. The government strenuously refuses to proceed until Mr. Galt's pet tariff scheme be passed, if possible, even though that should delay the whole matter another year. But we find that the Editor of the Review draws largely from that lying, sensation sheet, the New York Herald, and as a man's character may be known by the company he keeps, in future we may expect to be treated to weekly exhibitions such as the renegades of the Herald treat the scum of New York to. May we not say—sold again to the New York Herald also. Under the circumstances it would be vain to reason with the Review on the matter. His important measures would be found to be simply, extension of railroad charters, which he has sold himself to advocate; or acts to legalize by laws that he once declared legal. The Grand Trunk amalgamation would, no doubt, be to him an important act—of more importance than Confederation.

But a word in regard to our alliances.—Sorry would we be to ally ourselves with the New York Herald-Review Corruptionists; we claim no friendship, no connexion whatever with these. We are proud to be found on the side of Reform and good government, and we should be doubly proud to be the ally of, or one of five who were able to upset Mr. Galt's reckless currency scheme, thwart his tariff scheme, and thus in some degree aid in saving the country from degradation and ruin. Nor is the Examiner a new ally; it is Reform, was and will continue to be, notwithstanding all the slander and disregard of truth of the Review.

Lord Monck has been elevated to the Peerage of the United Kingdom, as Baron Monck, and the Legislature very fittingly presented him with an address on the occasion. Few governors of these provinces ever remained so long amongst us without being soundly abused by some party, but so popular is Lord Monck that all parties unite in honoring him, as he well deserves.

Over £50,000 worth of property has been destroyed by fire in Charlottetown, Prince Edward's Island.

No More Elections for Legislative Councillors.

Sir N. F. Belleau has introduced a Bill in the Legislative Council to prevent the necessity of having an election for Councillors this fall. As the law stands twelve Councillors would require to be elected this session, and if Confederation should be carried out this year, these Councillors would never sit in Parliament at all, and hence it is urged that their election would be useless. The Councillors of the Confederate Parliament will be appointed from the various Provinces, those elected at the time having the preference, and perhaps it is just as well to keep the number of anticipants as low as possible.

House Burned.

On Wednesday evening, 25th ult., a dwelling house belonging to Mr. Robt. Darling, of Emily, was consumed by fire. The house was occupied at the time by Robert Ivison. Mr. Ivison had been from home during the day, and on his coming home in the evening heard some crackling noise, as if of fire, and tying his horses, burst in the door and found the building on fire. The fire was up stairs, there being no appearance whatever of any below. Mr. Ivison has lost almost everything in the house, as the smoke and flames prevented his saving anything but a bed and one or two trifling articles. He also lost about $80 in money which he had in his coat pocket, hanging up, when he left home. This is supposed to be the cause of the fire. Some one who they have learned that the money was there is believed to have entered and taken it, and then fired the house to baffle search or to hide his nefarious work. The house was insured in the Farmer's Mutual for $250. Mr. Ivison's loss will be little less than $500 we learn.

Sudden Death.

During last week a very sad and sudden bereavement took place in the Township of Smith, in the family of Mr. Silas Pearson. A friend had brought Mr. Pearson a small pig, and it having got out of the enclosure in which it had been placed, Mr. Pearson went to catch it to put it back again, and Mrs. Pearson moved round through a small piece of woods to stop it, if possible. Mr. Pearson, however, caught it and shut it up, leaving Mrs. Pearson in the woods a few yards from where he caught the pig, she not returning for a few minutes they went to look what delayed her, as it was near noon, and not seeing her went down into the woods and said to relate found her extended, almost expiring, she only living a few minutes after they came to her. The cause of her death is supposed to be 'apoplexy;' it might, however, have been sun stroke.

The Fenians.

On Friday last a cry was raised that the Fenians were again landing at Fort Erie. A hasty telegram obtained by the Leader, and published, caused a little bustle and a greater desire to hear the news. It turned out to be nothing more than a party of United States Volunteers coming over to escort General Sherman home—or as some would have it—a picnic party. The Reeve of Fort Erie seeing the party, and believing them to be Fenians, at once telegraphed to Toronto, and this gave rise to the whole rumour. The Fenians have something else to do now than trouble us for a while; however, wisdom would say be ready for them if they do return.

More Volunteers.

Three new companies of Volunteers have been formed in this county. One at Norwood—Robert Wigmore, Esq., Captain; J. M. Grover, Lieutenant; W. H. Stephenson, Ensign. One at Hastings—H. Fowlds, jr., Captain; name of Lieutenant we did not learn yet; —— Huston, Ensign. One at Springville—John Dundas, Esq., Captain; Allan Cathcart, Lieutenant; W. McCamus, Ensign. This will make eight companies in this county. Good for Peterborough.

A friend since informs us that Mr. Humphries will be Ensign of the Hastings company.

B. R. Kimball, Esq.,

The numerous friends of Mr. Kimball will learn with pleasure that he is about to commence business at Petrolia. The Petrolia Valuator of the 21st ult. says:—

"We learn that Mr. Kimball, lately Superintendent of the Port Hope, Lindsay and Peterborough Railways, has decided upon opening a machine shop here, and the building is already put up on the Fairbank property, across the Creek. This very suitable building has been taken out of the woods and completed in the short space of a week under the superintendence of Mr. Geo. Smart, and Mr. Kimball is expected daily with his machinery.

Book Notices.

FRANK LESLIE'S LADY'S MAGAZINE, for August, is received. It contains some excellent fashion plates, and a great deal of interesting reading matter.

GODEY, for August, is also received. Its contents are varied, and will be favorably received by the ladies, for whom it is intended.

The Cobourg Sun says:—It is pleasing, even at this late period of the season, to say, that the American capitalists, who recently visited us, have undertaken, at their own expense, to bring one hundred tons of ore from Marmora to Pittsburg, and thoroughly test it, when, if the result be satisfactory, they will assume the railway stock and go on with the work. Our directors deserve great credit for the patient perseverance they have displayed in this matter, and we have little doubt they will be rewarded by seeing yankee enterprise and capital, putting Cobourg again on the high road to prosperity.

Col. Haultain gave notice of an address that an appropriation be made from the public funds for the purpose of making an allowance to the wives and families of members of the volunteer force when called away from their homes on active service, such allowance to be for wife or parent dependent upon volunteers 10 cents per day, for each child 5 cents ditto,

At a reform demonstration in Hyde Park, 27th ult., 1,500 police and a detachment of Guards protected the park. The gates were closed. The mob broke the iron railing and forced an entrance. The Horse Guards charged, the people, but did not use their swords.

The New York Herald says that a discrepancy accounting to some thirty millions of dollars has been discovered in balancing the accounts of Judge Chase while Secretary of the Treasury.

THE ATLANTIC CABLE.

IT IS NOW OPEN FOR BUSINESS.

The following telegram has been received from Mr. Field:—

The Great Eastern arrived at Heart's Content at 8 a. m. July 27. The average speed of the ship from the splice, made until we saw land, was a little less than 5 miles per hour, and the cable was paid out at an average of 5½ miles an hour; total slack less than 12 per cent. The weather has been more unpleasant on the Atlantic than has ever been known at this season of the year. We have had alternate days of rain, sometimes fogs and squalls.

I have requested Mr. Dash, Sec. of the Anglo American Telegraph Co., to send you his diary, which will give you a detailed account of the hopes and fears, ups and downs experienced in laying a cable across the Atlantic. We are in direct communication with Valentia since the splice, on the 13th instant, and have daily received news from Europe which was posted up on the outside of the Telegraph Office for the information of all on board Great Eastern, and signalled to the other ships. After taking in coal the Telegraph fleet will sail for the spot where the old cable was lost last year and recover the end and complete a second line between Ireland and Newfoundland, and then the Medway will proceed to lay the new cable across the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The cable will be up for business in a few days, and all messages sent to Europe in the order they are received at Heart's Content. I cannot find words sufficient to convey my admiration for the men who have so ably conducted the enterprise.

(Signed) C. W. FIELD.
Heart's Content, July 27.

The London Times of 27th says of the Telegraph:—"It is a great work, the glory of the age, the nations, and they who have achieved it deserve to be honored as the benefactors of their race."

HEART'S CONTENT, July 28.—The Atlantic Telegraph Cable in this day open for public business.

(Signed), CYRUS W. FIELD.

NEW YORK, July 31.—The following have been fixed as the rates for the Atlantic Telegraph:—From any Telegraph Station in America to any in Great Britain, for 20 words or less, including address of sender and receiver, £20 in gold. Every additional word not exceeding five letters, 20 shilling sterling per word. From same to same in Europe, £21. Every additional word, 21 shillings. From same to same in Africa, Asia, or India, not exceeding 100 letters, £25. Every additional word, 20 shillings. The letters in all words after the first twenty will be counted and divided by five. Each five or fractional remainder will be charged as a word. Messages in cipher will be charged double the foregoing rates.

LONDON GREETS NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, July 31.—Mayor Hoffman has received the following despatch:—

HEART'S CONTENT, July 28.— to the Mayor of New York:—May commerce flourish, and peace and prosperity unite us.

(Signed,) the MAYOR OF LONDON.

NEW YORK, July 31.—Business messages are being transmitted over the cable to and from Europe. The latest London dates, to private parties in this city, up to this morning, were to yesterday forenoon. Four thousand words were transmitted through the cable in 12 hours on the 28th inst.

ASPY BAY, July 30.—The reply of the President of the U. S. to the message of the Queen of England, was received here at four o'clock on Monday afternoon, 30th, and will be delivered to the Queen probably about two o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, Greenwich time.

What Others Think of Government Schemes.

The Trade Review says of the Tariff and the alterations made that the Finance minister has neglected altogether the commercial interests and its connecting branches, including the maritime interests of the Province, and the West India and other trades. The manufacturers of the country ruined, and the commercial interests neglected; surely such condemnation will open the eyes of all honestly desiring truth.

The Kingston News says:—"Nothing has done so much to lower the public estimation of Mr. Galt's ability as the way in which the Tariff has been managed. From the wholesale and directly opposite changes which have been made in the lists, it is evident that no fixed principal had been determined on which could be consistently carried out, and from the contradictions involved in these changes it is equally evident that Mr. Galt as either made a practical confession of his ignorance or want of forethought and neglect of careful examination, or else he has given way to the pressure of interested deputations. The Tariff has been a sorry bungle, and the natural effect has been to destroy implicit confidence in a financier possessed of great cleverness, (cunning) but of no fixed principles. Henceforth every new project that Mr. Galt puts forth will not be so readily taken for granted; it must undergo a close public scrutiny before it can be satisfactorily accepted."

The Brockville Recorder, under the Query "Which is right?" says:—"When Mr. Galt proposed to encourage home manufactures by placing a small duty upon the foreign made article, the Tory press sang his praises in loud strains. When by the present Tariff the same man proposed to admit foreign manufactures free, to the ruin of Canadians, the same Tory press still sing in favour of Mr. Galt. Will our neighbor there be enlightened us on the subject. Was he and his friends right in their first ideas of a little protection to Canadian manufactures; or are they right now in taking away all protection, to the ruin of the home maker?"

THE EXPENDITURE.—Galt has forced the House to grant his extravagant demands. Among the items granted are the following: $500,000 for completing the Parliamentary buildings at Ottawa, and $100,000 secret service money. The Ottawa buildings have already cost the enormous sum of $4,250,000. When commenced they were to be completed for $900,000. This is not one fourth the money squandered on these mammoth inconveniences. As to the $100,000 for secret service money, it is of little use keeping detectives in pay, if their warnings and intelligence are to pass unheeded, as they are said to have done at the battle of Erie, John A. M'Donald being on the latest, and consequently unable to attend to business. As one of the members remarked—it might be from this sum M'Dougall intended to raise the funds necessary to start the new paper in opposition to the Globe. We have no doubt in the least but that such will be the case, the ministry are mean enough for any piece of rascality. We are, however, astonished that Reformers can sit quietly and acquiesce in the open faced robbery carried on by Galt and his colleagues.—Exchange.

A story is told of a man in Indiana who had been in declining health for months, and was much afflicted with ague. He took a heavy dose of quinine, which caused him to vomit violently. In the process of vomiting he expelled from his stomach a live snake eleven inches long and of the thickness of an ordinary pipe stem.

AMERICAN NEWS.

The Scottish American says:—There have been many severe cases of cholera morbus reported in New York during the week, but there is scarcely one well authenticated case of Asiatic cholera, as yet reported. The deaths for the week were nearly fourteen hundred, or about three times the average of a healthy season. The excess is mainly due to the heat.

A political convention is about to be held at Philadelphia, of it the same paper says:—In regard to the attitude the South is likely to assume towards the Philadelphia Convention which meets on the 14th of August, we may quote the following item from Charleston:—A large public meeting under the auspices of leading citizen of Charleston was held on the 23rd inst., and delegates chosen to the State Convention which is to select delegates to the Philadelphia Convention. A long preamble indorsing the National Conservative movement as the only hope of the restoration of the Union and of peace, with several resolutions, were carried by acclamation. The first resolution denounces the radical policy as hostile to the Constitution, and tending directly toward anarchy and misrule. The second expresses hearty approval of the wise and statesmanlike vetoes of President Johnson, and his earnest efforts for the speedy restoration of the Union.—The third indorses the call for the Philadelphia National Union Convention. The fourth approves the call of the Governor for a State Convention at Columbia, to select Delegates from South Carolina.

At Washington resolutions were adopted requesting the President to urge on the Canadian authorities, and also on the British Government, the release of the Fenian prisoners recently captured in Canada, and also requesting him to cause the prosecution in instituted in the United States courts against the Fenians to be discontinued.

NEW YORK, July 31st.—Head Centre Stephens has addressed a document to the Fenian brotherhood, in which he says that the Fenians in this country are fright subordinate to the organization in Ireland, and they will do no chief instead of good unless they work solely to give aid to the organization in Ireland. He reiterates the statement that the fight for freedom on Irish soil will come off this very year. He has also addressed a circular to the brotherhood in New Jersey, Brooklyn, Williamsburg and this city to meet him in consultation on the 6th of August.

NEW YORK, July 31.—It is stated that the cholera is assuming an epidemic form in the city to an alarming extent. Sixteen persons died of cholera at the workhouse on Blackwell's Island from the 27th to the 29th of July. There were 13 cases and 4 deaths officially reported. During the past week there were forty-two deaths from cholera.

A shocking affair took place a few days since at Frankford, Ralls Co., Missouri. A young man named Lloyd had been visiting a young lady, a Miss Moss, whose parents opposed his attentions. On the last day he visited the house to arrange with the betrothed for their marriage, a quarrel ensued between him and the girl's parents, and he killed them both with a knife, and then fled, but was pursued and arrested.

In New York, on Saturday, a coal barge was unloading at Spring street, and as the men were at work on one end with the crane, some eight or ten boys at the other formed a file extending from the vessel to some unknown point beneath the pier, and carried on a rapid business, passing from one to the other large lumps of coal to some hidden receptacle. They removed in this way apparently about half as much coal as the men.

The Sandusky (Ohio) Register says the season has been decidedly unfavorable for the grape crop. The early rains, coming when the grapes were in their most tender state, caused blight and mildew to some extent, while the later rains so effected them as to cause many to fall off.

Mr. James Monroe of New Bedford, Mass., the other day received by Express, from New York, sixteen chronometers stolen by Waddell of the pirate Shenandoah from our whale ships.

A Kansas paper says:—"Two men of the horse thieving fraternity danced in the air on Lightning Creek one day last week. They immediately retired to a hole in the ground after their exercise."

A boy at Avoka, Minn., recently filled a musket with sand and gunpowder and fired it over his head. He will never do it again! his head was blown off.

How Insurrections are Put Down in Spain.

The Paris Temps publishes a private letter from Madrid, giving a striking account of the way in which insurrection is put down in Spain. I remember (says the writer) that at one time military executions were of every day occurrence in pain, so that I used to conjugate the verb "fusiller," (to shoot,) as the shortest bulletin of the news from Spain. The tradition seems to be still respected, and the logic of revolutions appears destined to remain eternally the same. At noon, two days back, twenty-one young fellows of the army, engaged in the late insurrection, almost all of handsome appearance were taken out of the prisons, and after being tied together two by two, were placed in carriages with the windows wide open, and escorted by a numerous body of troops to the place of execution, a spot selected in the vacant ground between the Salama on Palace and the Obampa Pipe-on. One of my friends is having five houses built not a hundred yards from the spot. The masonary and scaffolding are in course of erection, and afforded excellent positions for viewing the scene.

There was a preliminary ceremony of military degradation; a regiment was under the flag; then a discourse, which I could not hear, but which lasted two hours, during which time those unfortunate men must have already suffered a thousand deaths. An enormous crowd which had followed the procession

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The undersigned having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection, and that dread disease Consumption—is anxious to make known to his fellow sufferers the means of cure.

To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used, (free of charge,) with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, &c. The only object of the advertiser in sending the Prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable; and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

DARLEY'S
Arabian Heave Remedy and Condition Medicine

IS positively superior to any or all other preparations for the cure of Heaves, Coughs, Thick and Broken Wind, and all diseases which affect the Wind of Horses; also, as a Condition Medicine, surpassing everything of the kind; is easy to give, sure to cure, and safe in all cases and at all times, and does not prevent the horse from being worked while using it.

It clears from the breathing apparatus, by removing from the air-cells the coagulable lymph, or that secretion which in Heaves clogs them, causing a difficulty in breathing, and by its action on the diseased part, causing the mucous membrane to resume its natural dimensions, thus equalizing the circulation of the blood, and restoring the distended vessels to their natural size; by its use the horse's appetite is improved, all derangements of the digestive organs corrected, softening the skin, and giving to the coat a sleek and shining appearance.

BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY
IN CANADA.

The following testimony from a well known and highly respected Merchant of Prescott, is corroborative of the general approval given to Dr. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY:

PRESCOTT, C. W., Dec. 8th, 1859.

Messrs. S. W. Fowle & Co., Boston.

Gentlemen:—

Being solicited by your Travelling Agent, for an expression of opinion of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. I with pleasure assert that it is, in my belief, the best remedy before the public for coughs and pulmonary complaints.

Having tested the article with myself and family, in case of severe coughs and colds, for years, with uniform and unexceptionable success, I unhesitatingly recommend it with full confidence in its merits.

Yours truly,
ALFRED HOOKER.

The Great English Remedy.

SIR JAMES CLARKE'S
CELEBRATED FEMALE PILLS,

Prepared from a Prescription of Sir James Clarke, M. D., Physician Extraordinary to the Queen.

This well-known Medicine is no imposition, but a safe and safe remedy, for Female Difficulties and Obstruction from any cause whatever; and although a powerful remedy, it contains nothing hurtful to the constitution. To married ladies it is peculiarly suited. It will in a short time bring on the monthly period with regularity.

In all cases of nervous and spinal affections, pain in the back and limbs, heaviness, fatigue on slight exertion, palpitation of the heart lowness of spirits, hysterics, sick headache, whites, and all the painful diseases occasioned by a disordered system, these Pills will effect a cure when all other means have failed.

☞ These Pills have never been known to fail, where the directions on the second page of the Pamphlet are well observed

For full particulars, get a pamphlet, free, of the Agent.

N. B. $1 and six postage stamps enclosed to any authorised Agent will ensure a bottle, containing Pills, by return mail.

THE CANADIAN PAIN DESTROYER

As a Family Medicine, it is well and favorably known, relieving thousands from pains in the Side, Back and Head, Coughs, Colds. Sore Throat. Sprains, Bruises, Cramps in the Stomach, Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Bowel Complaints, Burns, Scalds, Frost-bites, &c. &c.

THE CANADIAN PAIN DESTROYER

Has now been before the Public for a length of time, and wherever used is well liked, never failing in a single instance to give permanent relief when timely used, and we have never known a single case of dissatisfaction, where the Directions have been properly followed, but on the contrary all are delighted with its operations, and speak in the highest terms of its Virtues and Magical effects.

We speak from experience in this matter, having tested it, thoroughly and therefore those who are suffering from any of the complaints for which it is recommended may depend upon its being a Sovereign Remedy.

The astonishing efficacy of the Canadian Pain Destroyer, in curing the diseases for which it is recommended, and its wonderful success in subduing the tortuing pains of Rheumatism, and in relieving Nervous Affections, entitle it to a high rank in the list of remedies for these complaints. Orders are coming in from Medicine Dealers, in all parts of the Country for further supplies, and each testifying as to the universal satisfaction it gives.

The Canadian Pain destroyer never fails to give immediate relief. All Medicine dealers keep it. Physicians order and use it; and no family will be without it after once trying it. Price only Twenty-five cents per Bottle.

HIDE BOUND HORSES.

A horse is said to be hide-bound when his skin will not slip under the pressure of the head, but sticks as if it was glued, which condition is always dependent on a deranged state of the stomach and digestive organs—by correcting which, and giving to them a healthy tone and condition, the disease or complaint will disappear. Experience has proved that the means best adopted to this end is "Darley's Arabian Heave Remedy and Condition Medicine." It has been used in numerous cases with complete success, generally effecting a cure in a few days. It is the best condition medicine known, and may be given with perfect safety at all times, and does not require that the horse be kept from work.

Remember the name, and see that the signature of Hurd & Co. is on each package.

PIANO-FORTES.
DRIGGS' NEW PATENT.

ARE THE ONLY INSTRUMENTS constructed on a truly scientific principle. That have greater strength, and will remain longer in tune than any other Piano. The construction is simple and natural, all the extraneous lumber in the body of the instrument is dispensed with; the sound boards are merely two arched planks of thin wood, like the front and back of a violin; the strings are attached to a strong iron frame, which is separate and entirely independent of the case, thereby dispensing with the old harp form of stringing by substituting straight bridges, preserving at the same time The Over Strung Bass, of which Mr Dumas is the inventor. By these improvements we gain much more vibratory power, at the same time preserving all its purity and richness of tone.

They have received the highest testimonials from the Press, and all the principal artists in the country, among which are:

Harry Sanderson,	L. M. Gottschalk,
Max Maretzek,	S. Thalberg,
Theodore Eisfeld,	Wm Mason,

EXPOSTULATION.

Ye friends of moderation,
Who think a reformation,
Or moral renovation,
Would benefit our nation.
Who deem intoxication,
With all its dissipation,
In every rank and station,
The cause of degradation:
Of which your observation,
Gives daily demonstration.
Who see the ruination,
Distress and desolation,
The open violation
Of moral obligation;
The wretched hesitation,
Without accommodation,
Or any regulation,
For common contestation:
A sense of deprivation,
Unequalled in creation.
The frequent desecration,
Of Sabbath ordination,
The crime and depredation
Defying legislation;
The awful profanation,
Of common conversation;
The mental aberration
And dire infatuation,
With every end gradation,
To maniac desperation.
Ye who, with consternation,
Behold this devastation,
And utter condemnation
Of all inebriation;
Why sanction its duration,
Or show disapprobation
Of any combination
For its extermination?
We deem a declaration
That offers no temptation
By any palliation
Of this abomination;
The only safe foundation
For total extirpation,
And under this persuasion,
Hold no communication,
With non .e emanation,
Of brewer's fermentation,
Or poisonous preparation
Of spirit distillation,
Or any vain libation
Producing stimulation.
To this determination
We call consideration,
And without hesitation
Invite co operation,
Not doubting imitation
Will raise your estimation,
And by continuation
Afford you consolation;
That in participation
With this association,
You may, by mediation,
Insure the preservation
Of a future generation
From all contamination;
And may each indication
Of such regeneration,
Be the theme of exultation
Till its FINAL CONSUMMATION.

Varieties.

A gentleman was once dining with a friend, when a most dreadful storm arose. In hope of abatement, the entertainment was prolonged to the latest possible hour; but at length it was over, and the storm showed no signs of ceasing, but, on the contrary, grew worse and worse. The host insisted upon his guest's acceptance of the impossibility of reaching his home that night.

The guest complied, but in a few minutes was missed from the parlor. In half an hour he reappeared drenched with rain.

"Where in heaven's name have you been?" asked the host, viewing the singular looking object, which looked like a dog about the paws, and a weeping willow about the head.

"I have been home to tell my wife not to sit up for me, as it was such a bad night I should have to remain here all night," said he quietly.

Mr. Aytoun, the laird of Kinaldie, was particularly indifferent respecting his attire, but was noted for his powers both of compliment and banter. Walking one fine morning on the Scores promenade at St. Andrews, he met a lady acquaintance whom he saluted with his usual courtesy. "Good morning madam; how well you are looking to-day!" "I'm sorry I can't return the compliment," responded the lady, adverting to the plainess of the laird's apparel. "Pob," said Mr. Aytoun, "you might have had as I did."

A TWO-EDGED JOKE.—Mr. Lowe, in 1859 laughed at the Derbyite Government—not at their aversion to Reform, but at the enthusiasm of their conversion. "Sheridan, when he saw a Highlander in a very large pair of trousers (said Mr. Rowe), remarked that converts were always enthusiasts." Mr. Lowe has himself since become a convert, though against Reform. "Was there ever a Highlander made his appearance," asked the sarcastic Bernal Osborne, "in so big a pair of breeches as the right hon. member for Calne?"

A YOUNG WAG.—A sleepy little fellow, when seated by the fireside the other evening in a cottage near Coaltown of Balgonie, attracted the attention of the auld folks by exclaiming, with much apparent earnestness, "Mither, I say, mither! my father's a dog. "Whist! Johnny, whist!" responded his mother. "Do ye give it up slyly mate-stopped Johnny. "He has been bearking a day" (barking wood). Johnny was pronounced too clever, and was put to bed.

SENSIBLE ADVICE.—An exchange paper among other suggestions which will enable a person to avoid the cholera, says:—"Endeavor, if possible, to keep a clean conscience and two or three clean shirts. Rise with the lark, but avoid larks in the evening. Be above ground in all your dwellings and above board in all your dealings. Love your neighbor as yourself, but don't have too many in the same house with you.

Quibble, reading that 'it has been decided in the Court Queen's Bench, in Dublin, that a clergyman of the Church of England can legally marry himself,' observed that that might be very well as a measure of economy, but that even in the hardest times he would rather marry a woman.

A countryman in Savannah, Ga., observed that a gang of darkies were working on the streets, each wearing a ball and chain, and asked one of them why the ball was chained to his leg? "To keep people from stealing it," said the darkey, "heap of thieves about here, massa."

A country doctor going on foot to visit a patient in a neighboring village, took a gun to amuse himself on the road. A peasant met him, and asked him whither he was going? "To see a patient." "Are you afraid of missing him?" said the inquirer.

Among the advertisements in an English journal appears the following:—"Two sisters want washing," and that "A spinster particularly fond of children wishes for two or three, having none of her own, nor any other employment."

A miserly bailiff in England came into possession of a barouche, and desiring an appropriate 'coat of arms,' adopted one representing a tin plate, over which was placed a fork, signifying 'look over the tin.'

Dr. T. C. CULVER'S

MEDICAL DISPENSARY,

Over 130 King St. East,

TORONTO.

For the cure of

CHRONIC AND SECRET DISEASES!

And all Female Complaints.

UNFORTUNATES READ.

YOUNG MEN WHO ARE TROUBLED with weakness generally, caused by a bad habit in youth, which produces constitutional debility, you can rely on our remedies, for we have treated over fifty thousand patients, and we guarantee a perfect cure in all cases.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES.

Our PERIODICAL DROPS will bring on the monthly sickness in cases of obstruction from any cause, and after all other remedies of the kind have been tried in vain.

NEW REMEDIES AND QUICK CURES.—For Syphilis strictures, seminal weakness, pains in the joints, affections of the kidneys, diseases of the head, throat, nose and skin, and all those dreadful affections arising from a secret habit of youth, which produces constitutional debility, renders marriage impossible, and in the end destroys both body and mind, the treatment we adopt is the result of upwards of thirty years experience and successful practice in Europe and America.
